PREFACE OF THE AMERICAN EDITOR

It is with feelings of satisfaction that the editor is at length able to present Messrs. Liddell and Scott's enlarged translation of Passow's Greek-German Lexicon to the American public. The work has been delayed far beyond the appointed and expected time of publication by unavoidable causes: the editor's public duties in college and school occupying six hours of every day, apart from the necessary private preparation for those duties, did not allow him leisure to prepare the work for the press as speedily as was first intended, consistently with that degree of accuracy which it has been his earnest endeavor to attain.

Of the work itself it seems scarcely necessary to say anything in commendation; it needs but a very brief comparison with either of the Greek-English Lexicons now in the field, to convince the scholar of its decided superiority in point of arrangement, development of significations, and accuracy of quotation. The plan pursued, and the materials employed in constructing this Lexicon, are fully detailed in the preface to the English edition, to which the reader is referred. Adopting Passow's admirable Lexicon as the basis of theirs, and carrying out the principles which he laid down for his own guidance, the English editors, by their own reading, by the aid of the Paris edition of Stephen's Thesaurus, and of other general as well as special Lexicons, have produced a work, which, for real utility and general accuracy, now stands, and will be likely long to be without a rival in the English language. It presents in a condensed form the results of the indefatigable researches of German scholars, who have for some years past supplied the literary world with what is most valuable in this as in every other department of philology.

From its first appearance, this Lexicon was adopted in the English schools, to the almost entire exclusion of all others, received the stamp of public approbation, and was awarded the palm of decided superiority over the only other Lexicons of equal pretensions that were then in use (Donnegan's and Dunbar's), by high critical authority, in an able and discriminating article in the Quarterly Review,¹ from which we extract the following passages:—"In speaking of Messrs. Liddell and Scott's Lexicon, we have awarded it the praise which we think it deserves—we have shown (we hope) satisfactorily its superiority over its rivals."² Again, "This great principle" (viz. to make each article a history of the word referred to³), "the only sure foundation on which to build a good Lexicon of the Greek language was very beautifully exemplified for the first time in Passow's Lexicon—Donnegan seems to have disdained it, Dunbar to have been ignorant of it;⁴ Messrs. Liddell and Scott have made it the basis of their work. And the consequence is, that Passow's Lexicon was, as far as that went, admirable; Donnegan's and Dunbar's, objectionable and mischievous; Messrs. Liddell's and Scott's, excellent and useful. And here another question naturally proposes itself to us—Have these last carried out in their work this principle, which they hold forward so prominently in their preface—have they constantly kept it in view, and regularly acted upon it? We have examined their Lexicon with great care and patience, as well with regard to this as other questions, and we answer without hesitation that they do appear to have kept constantly in view this great fundamental rule."⁵ Professor Dunbar himself, the editor of one of the rival Lexicons, testifies to the value of Messrs. Liddell and Scott's labors in the following language:⁶—"They have produced a good Lexicon; and, notwithstanding the aid they received from Passow, their additions indicate great industry, laborious research, general accuracy, and respectable scholarship. Their work proceeds from a university long famed for elegant scholarship and high pretensions, whose name and influence may be supposed to give the stamp of authority to everything that emanates from it. It is no wonder, then, that their volume should have cleared the field of England of almost all its competitors, supported, as it may be supposed, independent of its merits, by many scholars attached to the genius loci." But apart from the influence of the "genius loci," the substantial merits of the work, drawn as it has been carefully and laboriously from the best German sources, and embodying the lexicographical discoveries and improvements of German critics down to the present time, entitle it to the fullest confidence of the scholar, and the same reception in this country, that it has already obtained in England.

⁴ It is but justice to Prof. Dunbar to mention here, that in his reply, in the Classical Museum (No. IX., pp.

245-258), to the Quart. Rev., he exculpates himself from this charge on the ground that he merely edited a Lexicon, put into his hands for that purpose, which was inferior to the one adopted by Messrs. L. & S. as the basis of theirs; but admits its correctness with regard to the Lexicon itself.

Donnegan's Lexicon, notwithstanding it is the fashion to decry it as utterly worthless, having been drawn in a great measure, especially the fourth edition, from Passow's, contains much useful matter, but the absence of arrangement, the confusion of different significations, erroneous quotations and from different editions of the same author, and the blending of different articles into one, or giving several different interpretations to the same passage, render it an unsafe guide for the beginner, while to the Lexicographer Donnegan's sources are accessible in a less corrupt form; so that, though much of his matter is valuable, it would be a less arduous task to prepare a Lexicon entirely anew from the same sources, than to reproduce his work in a form that would render it a safe and reliable guide to the youthful student of Greek.

Dunbar's Lexicon is, in some respects, open to the same charge of want of arrangement and consistent development of significations, and necessarily so; for having taken, as the basis of his, a *Lexicon*¹ that was originally adapted to certain authors living at widely different periods, which could not therefore be expected, and was not intended to exhibit a complete or systematic view of the Greek language, and having added to this from his own reading, generally in the purest authors of the Attic period, and from other sources without strict regard to historic arrangement, he has, in increasing the size of the work, rendered its striking and fundamental defects (as a general Lexicon) more glaring, and more difficult to be remedied. These radical errors have been avoided or obviated in the work now offered to the American student, partly by the excellence of the basis adopted by the editors, and partly by their own care and diligence.

It remains for the American editor now to state what he has attempted, to render the book more acceptable and more useful to the youthful students of Greek among us (for for such chiefly have his additions been designed), and to justify the language of his title-page. It is there stated, that the Lexicon has been edited "with corrections and additions, etc.," and, to show that this statement is well grounded, a few of the corrections made in different articles are given below;² and, to avoid remark, only of those ἄυτος, 2 articles in one, v. Butt. Lex. s. v.

ἰάω, (2d.) incorrect as theme of ἰάται, q. v., and Butt. Lex. l. c.

αβρότης, the first ref. to Pind. is wrong, both being in fact the same passage, only the first ref. is to Böckh's lining, the 2d to Heyne's; and ref. to Eur. wrong also. In this article Donnegan's materials are much better, and need but a change of arrangement to be correct. It is not often, however, that this praise can be bestowed on his Lexicon.

ἀγαπάω preferred by Hom. to ἀγαπάω; just the reverse, as Passow correctly says.

ἄγρος, in Hdt. and Eur., a milk-pail; doubtful, for in Hdt. the first passage refers to something in which the child is carried by the herdsman, and afterwards exposed, and so in Eur. Ion, where it 'is=ὑπὸ τῆς 1337-8, and in the other pass. of Hdt. it is used to carry water, as in Eur. El. 55, where Electra, reduced to be a peasant's wife, with her ἄγρος on her head, is directed by the peasant to the fountains; it is true a milk-pail might be used for this purpose, but Ael. relating the circumstance mentioned in Hdt. substitutes ἰδρίαν for ἄγρος.

ἀγέλαρχος, in 2d ed. ref. is filled up to Luc. Amor. 22, wh., by its position, is incorrect, the word being ταῦρος, and its place after leader of a herd.

ἄγέλη II. the editors have followed Passow, in making the youths remain in the ἄγέλαι to the age of 17, while Müller, whom they quote, says they were not enrolled in them till the 17th year.

ἀγκύλη II. 2, is not the leash, but something on it.

ἀγκυλόδους, barbed, incorrect in Q. Sm., the word there being ἄρη.

ἀγωνίζομαι, is said to govern the dat. in Thuc. 4, 87, the correct constr. is given under II. c. inf.

ἀγωνοθετεῖα ref. to Polyb. in that connection wrong.

ἰεῖρω III. Hdt. 1, 165 is different.

ἑρέβομαι, all the forms in II., referred to here, belong under ἑρέβομαι.

ἰθρήνεντος in Xen. Cyr. l. c. is not 'foreg.,' as is evident from the connection in Xen.

ἰθλιβής in Nonn., Φύσιγναθος in Batr. etc., with wrong quantities from Passow; Ἀβδηρίτης, right in Passow. ἀκαλός II. and ἀκολος=ἐνθεσις in Stratt.; 1st wrong, 2d right.

γόον under γοῶν impt., in its own order 2 aor.

Δαναΐδης in Hes. Sc. 229 (not Δαναΐδαις), is not from Δαναός as here stated, but from Δανάη, the line commencing Περσεύς Δαναΐδης.

that remain uncorrected in the 2d English edition. The additions speak for themselves, they occur on almost every page, and are distinguished from the rest of the work by an obelisk.¹ This applies in the first half of the volume only to entire articles. It was the editor's desire at the outset to use some special mark to indicate at a glance his own additions; but at the request of the publishers, partly from a fear that the constant insertion of these marks would disfigure the book, and partly because Messrs. Liddell and Scott had not so distinguished their contributions from Passow's, this was dispensed with. The editor, however, claimed the privilege of enumerating, at the end of the preface, the words that had been added, as well as those that had been enlarged or altered, so that both here and abroad it might be known what changes had been made, without the necessity of comparing the two editions throughout.

The work proceeded in this way as far as the end of A, when the 2d English edition appeared.² On a comparison of his labors with those of the English editors, the American editor was gratified to find that in very many cases they had made the same alterations, added the same references, enlarged the same articles, and inserted the same omitted words. In making these, however, though the meaning was nearly the same, the language employed to express this meaning was generally somewhat different. In regard to amount the editor believes that the additions of new articles and forms are as numerous in the American as in the 2d English edition, and so of articles enlarged in the first part, where he had more time for research; but in the progress of the work the English editors (who have added and corrected comparatively very little in the early part) increase the number of their additions of new words and of improvements of articles already in their lexicon. As this enlargement seemed to continue in the same proportion after A, and as the editor on comparing his corrections and alterations in this portion found most of them anticipated abroad, it enabled him to comply with the earnest 518 is right under δίδω, but ref. wrong, which expl. is out of place in διδίδω, but ref. correct.

Ἑλλησποντίας in Ath. is not "caught in the H," but an adj. agreeing with θάλασσα.

ἐπιπώλησις is not part of II. 8, but of 4.

ἔριος, gen. ατος, appears to be without auth. for this gen.

ἐύηλεκτος, in Theocr. 1, 128, has nothing to do with "cheese;" it is there εὐπάκτοιο καρῷ.

ιος=εις in II. 6, 422 only in masc. in dat. sing., and so in all the Lexicons; but in this passage it is dat. neut. agreeing with ἡματι, and no example of masc. occurs: (for this the editor is indebted to Prof. Anthon, who has corrected the oversight of the Lexicons in the glossary to the new edition of his Homer, soon about to appear).

And so in different parts of the work the editor has noted many of the same nature; to save room a few more may be quoted, and the two editions compared for the corrections—ἀγκών II., ἀγλευκῆς—ἡμι, &c., so Ζεφυρίτης, ἡερόφοιτος, Θετί in voc. should be Θετί—Θηβαί—Ἰταλίδης—κόλαξ in Ar. Vesp.—Διμηρά in Epidaurus—Μελίαι—Πηνελόπη, &c.

¹ The editor has used this mark † because the () and [] were already employed for a different purpose. When the mark † stands at the beginning of an article and is not followed by another, the entire article has been added by the Am. editor; when this † stands at the beginning, or in the body of an article followed by another †, then the part included between the marks has been added by him; and finally when this mark stands in the body of an article not followed by another †, the part from the † to the end is his addition.

² EXTRACT FROM THE ADVERTISEMENT TO THE SECOND EDITION:—

"The unexpected rapidity with which our First Edition has been sold, has prevented us from improving the Second so much as we had hoped. Those whose studies are confined to the best and earliest authors will observe, perhaps, but little alteration.

"Nevertheless a good deal has been effected. We have gone over the whole very carefully, correcting errors, adding authorities, completing references where before only the author's name was found, and inserting the words of the passage referred to more fully when this seemed useful or instructive. The Contents of the Volume have been much increased; yet a slight enlargement of the page, and a more rigid economy of space, have enabled us to comprise it within almost the same number of sheets.

"Our chief aid in these improvements has been Pape's Lexicon, which was only in progress when we published our former Edition (see p. xix). It is a copious and valuable work, but is disfigured by countless false references, partly from inadvertence, but still more from the easy way in which the Author has borrowed his references, without verification.*

"We have to thank a great many friends for additions, corrections, and suggestions. We hope they will continue their good offices; as, without such coöperation, ultimate accuracy cannot be looked for.

* We have a multitude before us, for we kept a more or less faithful register of those we detected. Mr. Pape's way of writing 3, 5, 8 must be difficult to distinguish, or the printers must have put one for the other with very little care. The same may be said of 1 and 4.

and frequently expressed wishes of the Publishers, to proceed more rapidly with the printing of the work. Accordingly he revised the portion that had not been already stereotyped, from Λητοδότης, by the 2d English edition, and made it conform as far as possible to that, assigning to the English editors what they had corrected or altered in this part, and claiming nothing as his own, though previously inserted by him, that had been anticipated by them.

Abandoning from this point all further collection of new materials, the editor confined himself to the insertion of the Proper names, merely comparing his previous gleanings with the new copy, and inserting only where such matter had not been noted at all in the original work. Here too he commenced distinguishing, by the mark referred to above, all his own additions, intending on a revision of the first part to make the same distinction there; this, however, was found impossible in the case of simple additions or alterations, but has been everywhere prefixed to entire articles inserted by the editor: accordingly, to enable those who feel an interest in the matter to turn at once to the additions, and to prevent Messrs. Liddell and Scott from being exposed even to the risk of unmerited censure, the editor has collected at the end of the preface (p. xiv. sqq.) all those words to which additions have been made in the American edition not distinguished from the rest by any mark; this does not include those to which references have been filled up, where the English work omitted the authority altogether, or merely quoted the author's name; these are very numerous, especially in the earlier portion of the work.

To have reset the entire first half would have been productive of too great delay, as well as too expensive; the first 32 pages however have been reprinted from the 2d edition, and in these credit has been given to the English editors for those additions and corrections which had been simultaneously made by both, while the American editor's additional matter is distinguished here also from theirs by the insertion of the obelisk. In the remaining portion from p. 32 to p. 853 the editor compared the reprint with the 2d English edition, correcting such errors as were detected, and making such alterations as could be comprised in the same space, where necessary. New words could not be inserted, nor could additions be made to given articles; new references could be introduced only where space was left at the end of a paragraph, and these have been chiefly from Aristotle. In making this comparison, if an addition of the editor seemed greatly inferior to the corresponding one in the English edition, when a change could be made, credit was given to the English edition for this by not inserting the editor's mark, as in ἐπιδοτέω. Very frequently, however, it happened that in the two editions different words were added, that is, a new article in the American was not in the 2d English, and reversely. In this perplexing and laborious process it may occasionally happen that a word of translation, or reference to an author, may have been included within the editor's marks, though already in the work, and again a signification or explanation introduced by the editor may not have been so claimed, and may seem to pass under the authority of the English editors; if so, it has not been intentional, and could scarcely be avoided in so great a number. Such corrections and alterations will be instantly made when ever ascertained. References to authors however, and to particular passages as stated above, have not been alluded to in the Appendix to this Preface;—they have all been verified and are believed to be generally correct; in another edition this distinction (it is hoped) can be fully made.

Now with regard to the additions of common words, and the plan pursued by the editor in making these. Few scholars, perhaps none, are so intimately acquainted with the genius of the Greek language as to be able, by the aid of an index, however complete, to turn to detached passages, and arrive at the correct explanation of a given word or passage. The train of thought running through the previous portion of the work frequently modifies or gives force to an expression, which cannot be gleaned from the isolated passage under consideration; and it may safely be asserted that the only mode of preparing an accurate and reliable Greek Lexicon is by perusing the Greek authors continuously (in the order laid down in the Summary), and noting their peculiarities, as Passow has done for Homer and Hesiod; or else, in the mode adopted by Freund for the early Latin writers, by compiling, from actual perusal, special Lexica of the separate authors, and then combining them himself into a systematized whole. As the printing of this Lexicon commenced immediately after the copy was put into the editor's hands, he of course could not expect to improve the work by the addition of any class of writings; besides, his time was limited: the best portion of the day was wholly occupied with laborious professional duties, and he had, therefore, only the evenings and mornings to devote to the Lexicon. This scanty allowance of time, with the tedious duty of proof-reading, which fell almost entirely on himself,¹ afforded him little opportunity for much systematic and continuous reading. However, he has endeavoured to accomplish something in this respect, believing that the correction of errors and verification of assertions advance the cause of science, as well as the accumulation of new materials, and are more useful than the repetition of unauthenticated statements from previous writers.—As Messrs. Liddell and Scott had omitted in their course of reading the Lyric poets contained in Gaisford's Poetae Minores, relying on Passow's previous labours, which, though accurate and extensive, had still left gleanings sufficient to repay a subsequent gatherer, the editor began with these in chronological order, comparing Gaisford's with the more complete collection of Bergk,² and with Schneidewin's,³ and inserting in the Lexicon words or significations omitted, and earlier references to particular forms or usages, which latter class of additions was most numerous. In the reference to these poets Gaisford's collection is always intended, except in the cases where particular editions are mentioned in the list of authors, or the word is not given in Gaisford: then, the reference is to these editions, or to Bergk's; and when this is done, it is indicated by appending the letters Bgk. to the quotation. In the course, too, of college duty, and private reading apart from this, the editor went over portions of Aristophanes, Euripides, Xenophon (who, of the Attic authors, seem to have been least carefully examined by the Oxford editors), and Theocritus, from all of whom additions have been made to the Lexicon. And here it may be stated, as one great merit of the plan carried out by Messrs. Liddell and Scott from Passow, that additions can thus be made to their Lexicon from authors of different periods without producing that confusion alluded to in the notice above taken of Professor Dunbar's Lexicon, because, being arranged chronologically, every period has its appropriate place, and words from earlier or later authors fall naturally and consistently into this without marring the symmetry of the whole.

The most numerous additions, however, to this part of the Lexicon, have, from the nature of the case, been drawn from other lexicons. Especially would the editor make the fullest acknowledgment of his indebtedness to the Paris edition of Stephen's Thesaurus,⁴ Pape's Greek-German Lexicon, Rost and Palm's new edition of Passow (A-Ερρομαί), Jacobitz and Seiler's Greek-German Lexicon (A-O), the special lexicons referred to on p. xix, and, in addition, Damm's (ed. by Rost) to Homer, Crusius' to Homer (with review by Ameis in Neue Jahrbuch., v. 37, pp. 243-288), Linwood's to Aeschylus, Matthiae's to Euripides (A-I), Schleusner's to LXX., Wahl's Clavis N. T. (3d edition, Leipzig, 1843, 4to), compared with Wilke's (Dresden, 1841, 2 vols. 8vo) and Rose's Parkhurst, Schmid's Concordance to N. T. edited by Bruder (Leipzig, 1841, 4to), and the indexes of the editions referred to in the catalogue. Besides these, the editor has occasionally consulted Donnegan's, Planche's, and Dunbar's⁵ Lexicons: of the first two he has made little use; but, as they are intended for the same object, he felt bound to refer to them, since it would have been singular indeed if, in so vast a variety of subjects, there were no one point on which they might not have been more accurate or more full than the Oxford Passow; and such has been found to be the case, though the editor has never taken aught from them without verification elsewhere; while of the last-mentioned, except the excellent appendix of scientific terms, he has made no use, for a different reason; the only article taken from Dunbar's Greek-English Lexicon, that the editor is aware of, is ἄγκυρα, and this is credited to Professor Dunbar as being an addition of his own. For another class of words, greatly increased in number for the benefit of younger students, the tense-forms, etc., of irregular verbs, the editor is indebted to Buttmann's Catalogue of Irregular Verbs translated by Mr. Fishlake, the list of these verbs in Lobeck's edition of Buttmann's Greek Grammar, and particularly to Carmichael's copious and excellent work on the same subject. From these sources then, but principally from the Thesaurus, Pape, and Rost and Palm, has the editor derived his additions of common words to the Lexicon, but he has always verified the reference, and made the translation from the original Greek, and not from the Latin or German of these Lexicons, except in the case of a few later authors, as Philo Judaeus, the Geoponica, Oracula Sibyllina, Philostratus, Clemens of Alexandria, and a portion of Oppian and Nicander.

⁴ Thirty-two Nos., A-Πααλ, omitting certain portions. In the other letters occasional use was made of Valpy's edition, 8 vols. folio, London, 1815-28.

⁵ Dunbar's Lex. 1st edition, Edinb. 1840; the editor was not aware of a 2d edition having appeared until he saw it noticed in the Quart. Rev. p. 299: of this (2d ed) he has not been able to make any use whatever.

The chief improvement (for such the editor believes it to be) however, will be seen at a glance to consist in the "insertion in alphabetical order of the Proper names occurring in the principal Greek authors." His own experience as a teacher had made him feel very sensibly the want of some such aid for the pupils under his charge; and, on communicating his intention, when requested to edit this Lexicon, to older and more experienced teachers, he was glad to find that their views in this respect coincided with his own. The Proper names are a portion of the Greek language, subject to similar laws of composition, derivation, and inflection to the other words of the language; frequently, too, they are the oldest¹ or only existing form of some regular Greek substantive, or adjective, the use of which in the common language may be found in some yet unedited production, and as such, are necessary to the full development of the language. This principle has long been admitted and acted upon in Latin Lexicography; it is taken as fully established by Freund in his recent copious and valuable Lexicon, and is adopted in the reissue of Passow's Greek Lexicon by Rost, Palm, and Kreussler. The propriety of introducing them into a Greek Lexicon is admitted, too, by Pape, who adopts, however, a different arrangement, which is, giving them in a separate form as an appendix to his other Lexicon; but a great objection to this mode is the difficulty, nay almost impossibility of determining what derivatives shall be assigned to the Common and what to the Proper portion, and the great inconvenience arising therefrom in the constant reference from one to the other. Besides it breaks up the connection between the two portions, which is exhibited when they follow in alphabetical order in the same volume. This difficulty has been felt by the Oxford editors, and they have had to act very arbitrarily in the admission or rejection of such words; while in their Lexicon the force of a derivative is frequently lost from the primitive proper name not being exhibited in the connection.

On this head, as on all others relating to Greek Lexicography, Passow's example and authority ought to be of great weight: he says,² "But we ought to speak here chiefly of the admission of Proper names, mytho-historical and geographical As regards the admission of these, and their complete enumeration, I have expressed my reasons for this course in my work, Ueber Zweck und Anlage Griechischer Wörterb. (2), pag. 21, and I have strengthened these in my Greek Lexicon, first part, pag. xi, 4th edit. I now repeat them the less fully, because Hermann, Opusc. 2, p. 223, has expressed himself on this subject in the most peremptory manner. It is for this reason, that, as I agree fully with the principles, so do I wish to see them developed more consistently in the continuation of the work."—Further he says,³ "Both geographical and historical names ought to be admitted, but there should not be given, as in Forcellini and Scheller, comprehensive geographical or mytho-historical information, for this lies entirely beyond the limits of a Lexicon; in this only the relation of the individual word to the language ought to be indicated. Of geographical words, therefore, nothing ought to be stated, further than whether the word indicate a country, a city, a river, a mountain, etc., and to what part of Greece it belongs, because the character of the race had an actual influence on the formation and the usage of the words. So of names of persons; whether they indicate a man or woman, a freeman or slave, of what Grecian tribe, and of what period If any one now ask, what is gained for lexicography by this procedure, we answer, what is sought to be gained chiefly by a critical Lexicon, that one may survey the language in all its formations and creations." To these remarks of the illustrious lexicographer we subjoin the decisive words of Hermann: "In our opinion these (proper names) are least of all to be neglected, not only on account of the forms which either they themselves, or else their derivatives, have most worthy of mention, but also because a large portion of these names are by far the earliest monuments of the ancient language of the Greeks."

The editor has gone somewhat beyond what Passow lays down for his own guidance, in his account of individuals (indicating here also the portion of Greece, etc., to which they belonged, and generally the occupation of each), and occasionally also of towns; commonly merely pointing out their situation, unless some derivative required a particular fact to be stated respecting them, in order to explain fully the allusion in the derivative, or else some peculiarity of form or quantity required further notice: sometimes, in the case of important places, the modern name has been added. For further particulars the student should consult a Classical Dictionary, as this is not designed to supersede the necessity of consulting such a work on all these points; but, while the student should refer to the Classical Dictionary for historical and geographical information, it does not render the insertion of the Greek forms in an ordinary Lexicon less necessary; for, apart from the reasons assigned above by Passow and Hermann, which require these to be included for a complete development of the language, the youthful student will not find elsewhere the information of which he constantly stands in need—the mode of inflection and the derivatives of such words. Dr. Anthon's Classical Dictionary, the one now chiefly in use in schools, though an excellent work, professes on the title-page to give an account merely of the principal names, and does not, as a general rule, add the Greek forms, while the new "Biographical and Mythological Dictionary," edited by Dr. Smith, of larger size and greater pretensions, though it admits the Greek form of Greek names after the Roman form, gives no clue to their inflection or composition; and it omits also several classes of words which are requisite for the full development of this portion of the language, namely, Greek forms of foreign names used by Greek writers, foreign words introduced into the Greek language;¹ as a general rule, patronymics, and gentile appellations, even from the earliest writers, and minor points of prosody,² correctly and properly enough, because this belongs to the province of Greek lexicography, and lies beyond the scope of a Classical Dictionary; besides, but a few numbers of this were published when the editor began his labours, and geographical articles are entirely excluded.

These are the grounds on which the editor has admitted the proper names into the body of the Lexicon—it is for others to decide whether correctly or not. He has endeavoured to give a pretty accurate account of those occurring in the early Epic and Lyric poets, historians, orators, and the Scenic poets; from later writers he has given a very copious list, but not completely; and in the whole of this portion of his work he desires to render the fullest acknowledgment to Pape's Lexicon.³ This volume he has followed throughout, not slavishly, for it is liable to the same charge as the other portion of his work—erroneous references and typographical errors. Dr. Pape, though he has evidently gathered materials from all quarters most laboriously—in fact, as every page proves—appears, nevertheless, to have taken Crusius' Manual for his basis, and very frequently makes the same erroneous reference that that work contains, especially in Aristophanes, substituting one play for another, or referring merely to the author without quoting the passage. Crusius' work is one of considerable labour, and deserves praise for what it effected; but it is very faulty in references. In Pape's work, too, the references, in the case of all the Scenic poets and the Attic orators, are to different editions from those used by Messrs. Liddell and Scott; for the sake of uniformity of reference, and the convenience of those using this work, the editor has adapted them to the editions as quoted in the list of authors. This was a tedious, laborious, and time-consuming task, but one that was necessary, if the editor wished to discharge his duty aright. He has, besides, always verified the references to the earlier writers, and very frequently, but not always, to those of later date. In the correction and enlargement of this portion of the work, in addition to Pape's Lexicon, which (except in the case of Inscriptions and very late writers) he has incorporated almost entire, he has derived materials from Crusius' Wörterbuch der Eigennamen, Dr. Anthon's Classical Dictionary, Dr. Smith's Biographical and Mythological Dictionary (of this only a few numbers were available), Davis's Index to Herodotus (London, 1829), Müller's historical writings (with the maps in the English translation), Cramer's Greece, Italy, and Asia Minor (with maps), Kiepert's Atlas von Hellas (1es und 2es Heft), D'Anville's Atlas, the Ancient maps of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, Bischoff and Möller's Wörterbuch der Geographie, Sickler's Handbuch der Alten Geographie, Uckert's and Forbiger's treatises of the same subject, Leake's Morea and Northern Greece, Ainsworth's "Travels in the Track of the Ten Thousand," Thirlwall's, Mitford's, Wachsmuth's, and Heeren's historical works, Ersch and Gruber's Allgemeine Encyclopädie, C. F. Hermann's Polit. Antiq., Winer's Biblisches Real-Wörterbuch (2d ed. Leipzig, 1833); the notes and indexes to editions of classical authors, particularly the excellent and copious index to Groskurd's German translation of Strabo, comprising the 4th volume, and the indexes to Didot's "Bibliotheca Graeca," and other works referred to under separate articles.

The editor has been thus particular in enumerating the sources from which he has drawn, from a desire of assigning full credit to all from whom he has taken, and because he feels deeply sensible of his own deficiencies in so vast a field as this, and of the necessity of having access to accurate sources of information to produce anything useful or valuable; and to those from whom he has drawn he is willing to attribute the full credit, if there be anything here stated more accurately or more fully than in works hitherto accessible to American students, satisfied, in this his first appearance before the public in his own name, if he has been the means of collecting into one body information from many different quarters for the benefit of those for whom his exertions have been chiefly employed. The editor, however, may be allowed to express the hope that, by industriously pursuing the course marked out for his future labours in this department—a course upon which he has already entered—he may hereafter be able to contribute his mite to the advancement of that branch of philology to which he expects to devote the best years of his life. Ample room is still left for generations yet to come in this department of learning: the Lyric poets require to be re-read carefully, Herodotus will admit of a re-perusal, and Hippocrates is yet to be studied; Euripides and Aristophanes have hitherto been neglected: a wide field for future labour is offered in the Attic orators: Xenophon of the early historians needs a careful reading; Plutarch and Lucian are far from being exhausted, having generally been examined only by indexes: and then before the adventurer lies the boundless expanse of later Greek, almost untouched; room enough here for many labourers to work without jostling.

One object of eager solicitude with the editor was to reproduce the labors of Messrs Liddell and Scott in as accurate a form as possible. With this view he undertook to read the second proof of every page himself, which he did, with the exception of the portion mentioned on p. xiv. In many places there was an inconsistency in the accentuation, as ἄγκυρα and ἀγκύρα, δάς and δᾶς, ιδρώς and ιδρως, δοίδυξ and δοῖδυξ, κλίμαξ and κλίμαξ, πούς and πούς, the compounds of πῶρα, etc.; how easy a matter it is, however, to overlook such minutiae, may be perceived from the word διέκπτωσις, which appears to have escaped even German accuracy, and to have passed unnoticed in at least four different revisions; it is correctly printed in Passow's 3d edition, incorrectly διέπτωσις in his 4th, and so repeated in Rost and Palm's; adopted in this form by Messrs. Liddell and Scott, and unchanged in their 2d edition. In the accentuation of ἄγμα the editor has ventured to differ from all the Lexicons which he has consulted; they give ἄγμα: but the analogy of πῶρα (πέπρωρα) requires ἄγμα, for the a in ἄγνυμι is long by nature, as ἔαγα, ἄγη, etc. The Oxford editors, in the 2d English edition, though they have greatly improved their work in general, have, in their desire to gain room, at the same time, injured it not a little by rejecting many words,¹ which stood in the first edition without authority; to some of these the American editor has filled up the references, while others stand as in the original work;² by rejecting, in many instances, the parts of compounds, which were given in the first edition from Passow, and which have been retained where occurring and filled up where wanting, in the American reprint; (they have given rather a singular appearance to their work by adopting at the conclusion Pape's plan of indicating the parts of compounds by a hyphen, while at the commencement they adhere to their former mode; this was unnecessary, and in the editor's opinion, is far from being an improvement, unless the parts of the compound be written after (except in the case of words compounded without change), for frequently Pape's hyphens give no more clue to the derivation than if they were not there at all, especially to younger students; the plan of the 2d edition of the abridgment is a very good one, and appears to the editor preferable to either of the others, i. e., to use the hyphens and give also the component parts); by altering references which were correct in the 1st edition³ (this seems rather to be the result of hurried printing, for the 2d edition does not appear to be as accurately printed as the first); and finally, they have in one or two instances given wrong explanations of passages in 2d edition which were right in the 1st.¹ In the early part of the work, also, as before stated, the editors have not often corrected or completed references, except in the case of Aristotle, Polybius, and Lucian; in this part the editor has corrected a number of erroneous references, but very few considering the immense number of references in the volume, and from an actual perusal of the whole work, he can say, in justice to the editors and proof-reader, that the book is printed with great accuracy.

² In reprinting this Lexicon the editor omitted nothing but what seemed wrong, or without any authority whatever; while he allowed those words that rested on the auth. of Gramm. or late writers to remain, even when no auth. was quoted: of these the English editors have omitted in their new edition a very large number, but the Am. editor did not feel himself at liberty to do so, partly from a wish to reproduce here everything that was not actually wrong, and partly from the belief that many of these words might be verified; and his has proved to be the case; he struck out ὑβύρτακος, ἄγέω, ἄγιω, ἄγροβώτης, ἀκάτειον, ἄλδο*, ἀνατλήω, βασανιστήρ, βωτήρ, ἐξαλίξω, ἐπιπορπώω; and all of these were omitted in 2d English edition, except ὑβύρτακος, ἄγέω, and ἄλδο*: some forms were allowed to remain, and some were inserted, though not in use, from which to derive remote derivatives. Others may have been omitted not noted here.

In regard to the use of particular terms and forms some changes have been made; chiefly to make the work conform to the text-books in use among us; as, restoring 'sub-junctive' in place of 'conjunctive,' giving the lenis and aspirate to pp; inserting, as stated above, both forms of compound words; giving the tenses of verbs more fully, particularly the 1 perfect active, when resting on good authority, and adopting the usual form of appellation for the Greek divinities and heroes: here, a difficulty arose at the outset; the nomenclature appears to be in a transition state, the old method in England and this country still in a great measure maintaining its ground, the new and more accurate having completely established itself in Germany, and with the diffusion of German learning beginning to assert its claims in other lands. The Oxford editors have generally adopted the German mode, transplanting into their language the Greek forms, but not consistently, for they speak of Hephaestus and Vulcan, Ares and Mars, Asclepius and Aesculapius, and almost always use the form Hercules. It was a matter of debate with the editor whether to follow them throughout, or to make their articles and his own in accordance with what in this country is yet the almost universal practice. He felt reluctant to introduce so radical a change, especially since distinguished scholars were at variance on this point and unwilling apparently to lead the way: the editor would say with Mr. Leitch,² "Besides I felt that it would be presumptuous in me to attempt to lead, while those who are entitled to do so, although many of them admit the necessity of reform in this matter, have done so little toward introducing a better system." For these reasons the old system of nomenclature, which has become naturalized as it were in our poetry, history, and light literature, as well as our school manuals, has been for the present retained.

Before concluding the editor would publicly acknowledge his deep indebtedness to Professor Anthon for the generous interest he has manifested, and the valuable aid he has afforded in the republication of the present work. By his advice and encouragement, and with his promised assistance in difficulties, it was undertaken, for without these the editor would have shrunk from so laborious and responsible a task: the want of books of reference in a city like New-York, where there is no public library containing recent critical editions, and philological works in this department, is a serious obstacle to extensive research; while the editor's limited reading ill qualified him to revise a Lexicon intended for the whole body of Greek literature from its first development in the Homeric poems to its decline in the writers of the Eastern empire. Professor Anthon's valuable and extensive library, which, on this as on previous occasions, has been at the command of the editor, in a great measure supplied the former want, while in respect to the latter the editor hoped to find in that same distinguished scholar's varied and abundant stores of classic learning a cover for his own deficiencies. In every difficulty where aid was sought, that aid has been cheerfully and readily afforded; the Professor has never refused or been reluctant to give his time and attention, even to the neglect sometimes of his own editorial labors. This work, then, is offered to the public with more confidence than it would otherwise be, from the fact that many of the corrections and additions have been suggested, or approved of, by Professor Anthon. But while making this full acknowledgment for the assistance he has received, the editor would wish it to be understood that Professor Anthon is not in any respect responsible for the merits or defects, the corrections or blunders of the work; whatever decision may be passed upon it, whether it be received favorably or otherwise, the editor alone is to be held accountable for the additional matter: the materials furnished by Professor Anthon from his own reading have been used in the same way as those from other quarters, and incorporated with the editor's collections. For this same reason the attempt has been made to distinguish the additions and alterations from the original work, that the English editors may not be exposed to the chance of censure for what may be the fault of another.

The editor's acknowledgments are due also to G. W. Collord, Esq., an instructor in the Grammar School of the College, for having relieved him of a portion of the heavy labour of proof-reading, viz., from the middle of E to 'Ημι, p. 627, and again from παρυφιστημι, p. 1129 to the end; this gentleman also aided the editor in re-reading and comparing the whole work (except the first 34 pages) with the 2d English edition. Mr. Collord's well known accuracy and practical acquaintance with the subject afford a guarantee that the book will be accurately printed.

The desire of the publishers to avoid any further delay in the publication of the work, and the long and tedious labour of revising the plate proofs, induce the editor to send it forth without a table of 'addenda et corrigenda,' for which he has collected some materials. Close application to the task through the whole summer, and more than half his scanty vacation of a single month, render it necessary to defer the preparation of this table till after the August vacation.

May this, his first appearance before the public, meet with a not too harsh reception; want of time and other occupations ought not of course to be pleaded as an apology for errors or inaccuracies, but they may serve to account sufficiently for no further additions having been made to the Common words, especially too when the editor's engagement only required him to insert the Proper names. Criticism, in a proper spirit and with the detection of error and the promotion of truth as its object, ought not to be objected to; but unfortunately it is too often the case at present to make literary criticism a vehicle for ill-natured, one-sided, and undeserved attacks, which have no other object in view than to gratify private enmity or personal pique. From public criticism, whether passing a favorable or unfavorable decision on his labours, if made in a spirit calculated to promote the cause of truth and sound learning, and from private communications, the editor will most gladly and thankfully avail himself of corrections or improvements for a future edition.

P R E F A C E.

WE are at length able to put forth this Lexicon. It has cost us several years of labor and that for the most part very heavy, because for the most part we had only spare hours to bestow. Events, of which it is needless to speak particularly, threatened more than once to break it off altogether.

However, we have at length finished it. And we send it forth in the hope that it may in some wise foster and keep alive the accurate study of the Greek Tongue; that tongue, which has been held one of the best instruments for training the young mind; that tongue, which as the organ of Poetry and Oratory is full of living force and fire abounding in grace and sweetness, rich to overflowing, while for the uses of Philosophy it is a very model of clearness and precision; that tongue, in which some of the noblest works of man's genius lie enshrined—works, which may be seen reflected faintly in imitations and translations, but of which none can know the perfect beauty, but he who can read the words themselves, as well as their interpretation.

It will be proper, by way of Preface, to say something of the nature of our Work, of the sources from which we have drawn, and of what we ourselves have done.

But first it may be well to notice an objection that may be taken, at starting, to the notion of an English Lexicon of the Greek Tongue. It may be asked, whether such a Lexicon should not be in Latin, as in the old times; whether the other is not an unworthy condescension to the indolence of the age.

In answer, we would draw a distinction between an English Lexicon and English Notes to Classical Authors. We hold that Critical Notes on these Authors will always be best in the Latin Tongue. No other will be found so brief, clear, and easy of remembrance; no other has the advantage of technical terms and phrases which all Scholars have agreed to use; no other will be so readily understood by Readers of all countries and all ages. But though this is our opinion in regard to Critical Notes, it by no means follows that we should hold the same in regard to Lexicography. The chief business of Lexicography is one, to interpret words; of Criticism another, to unravel the idioms and intricacies of language. The Latin Tongue may be the best organ for the latter work, yet very unequal to the due execution of the former. And quite unequal it is. For just as impossible is it to render the richness, boldness, freedom, and variety of Greek by Latin words, as it is to give any adequate conceptions of Milton or Shakspeare by French translations. Yet French is, confessedly, the language of Mathematics. So Latin is the language of Classical Criticism. But we hold it feeble and defective for purposes of Lexicography. And when we add to this the fact, that in richness at least and freedom (though certainly not in beauty or exactness) our own language is not unworthy to compare with the Greek, we conclude confidently, that the best Lexicon an Englishman can use to read Greek with, will be in English. A Frenchman may have reason for using a Greek-Latin Lexicon; an Englishman can have none.

Nor is this a mere opinion of our own. A Greek-English Lexicon has been demanded often and by high authorities;¹ has been undertaken more than once by able scholars; and several Lexicons of this kind have been published.

¹ As by Bp. Blomfield (Quarterly Review, vol. 22, p. 348), whose Glossaries to Aeschylus show how well he understood the office of a Lexicographer. (We have thought it needless to refer specialty to these.) A work of the kind was undertaken by the Bishop's brother, Mr. E. V. Blomfield, whose early death left many fair promises unperformed; also by Dr. Nicoll, late Hebrew

Professor in this University; and by others. See further an able Article in the Quart. Review (vol. 51, p. 144 foll.), written, we believe, by Mr. Fishlake, the Translator of Buttmann's Lexilogus and Catalogue of Irregular Verbs. In the two articles just quoted will be found an amusing History of Greek Lexicography nearly down to the present time.

It might be expected that we should here take such notice of these Lexicons as to justify our adding another to the list. We could easily do so. But at this time and in this place we decline the task; partly because it is an invidious one, and might be attributed to other motives than a desire of serving the cause of Truth and good Scholarship; partly because to do it thoroughly would require a considerable space and much minute detail—more perhaps than could justly be allowed within the compass of a Preface. We therefore pass over this subject here and now; merely remarking that, if in the most popular of these Lexicons now abroad, there are found resemblances to ours (as no doubt there will be, here and there, especially in the Homeric words), the reason hereof is that we have both been indebted to Passow—though the Author of the Lexicon we allude to has made slow and scanty acknowledgment of the amount of his debt. We proceed to speak of our own.

In the Title-page, our Work is said to be “based on the German Work of FRANCIS PASSOW.” We cannot too fully express our obligations to this excellent book, without which ours never would have been attempted. But before doing so, we will lay a short account of it before our Readers; and for this purpose we must begin with Schneider’s still earlier Work.

The Third and last Edition of SCHNEIDER’S Greek-German Lexicon¹ appeared in 1819; and immediately became the Book of common use throughout Germany. It contains a vast mass of learning, though a great deal of it is out of the way, and of very little use to the general Student. Schneider was a great Naturalist, was the Editor of Aristotle’s History of Animals, of Theophrastus, of Nicander, of Oppian; and this his peculiar taste shows itself a little too much in a Lexicon of limited size; while he too much neglects the usages peculiar to Homer and the earlier writers, and gives little account of the Construction of words. Moreover he has paid slight regard to clearness of arrangement, and made small attempt to trace the connection of different significations.²

After this, the work of Greek-German Lexicography fell into the hands of PASSOW in the following manner.³ An abridgment (Handwörterbuch) of Schneider’s work had been published by Riemer under Schneider’s own direction. Some four or five years before Schneider’s 3d Edition had appeared, Francis Passow, a favorite Pupil of Jacobs and Hermann, was appointed Professor at Breslau.⁴ He had already written a Treatise containing his views of what a Greek Lexicon should be;⁵ and in course of time it came to Schneider’s ears, that Passow had supplied the prosodiocal marks and references in a copy of Riemer’s Book. Schneider then pressed him to prepare a new Edition of this Abridgment—merely (as Passow thought⁶) for the purpose of getting the prosody supplied. Passow complied, but undertook the work in a very different sense from this. He began by claiming full powers of alteration, and then set to work in earnest. In 1819, the same year that Schneider’s last edition was published, appeared also the First Part of Passow’s Work:⁷ what he proposed to himself will be best given in his own words. Thus then he writes to his old Preceptor, F. Jacobs, on the publication of the First Part:⁸ “It would be worth a great deal to me, to hear your judgment on the Plan of my Lexicon, especially on the manner in which I have given the first place to the Homeric senses, and then to those of Hesiod; my purpose being to go on in regular historical order, and thus to arrive at something like completeness. These Homeric and Hesiodic Articles I have worked up with real diligence, trusting wholly to myself; and here I hope nothing will be found wanting, that can properly be required in a Lexicon. All the rest has been put together from Schneider’s materials (often raw enough), with my own notes, marginal and interlinear; and this part will be found more or less perfect, according to the measure of Schneider’s exactness, and my own carefulness. In the Conjunctions, however, Particles, and Prepositions, I have found it necessary to go below Homer, and beyond Schneider. If I live for a Second Edition, the old Lyric and Elegiac Poets, with the Prose of Herodotus and Hippocrates, shall be worked into the text on the same principles; in a Third, the Attic Poets; and then, the Attic Prose. In this way I hope gradually to come nearer to my ideal of a good Lexicon, and to bring organic connection into the thing of shreds and patches which we now have." These views, which may be found more fully stated in his Preface,¹ he did not live to see fully realized. The second and third Editions followed so quickly, that he had not time to make any thorough improvement.² But in the fourth³ he carried on his plan so far as to have worked into the Text (though not completely) the phraseology of the earliest post-Homeric Poets, as also that of Herodotus. And the Work, thus remodelled, he considered so completely his own child, that he dropped the name of Schneider from the Title-page. Soon after the publication of this, his own Lexicon, his health began to fail. He died on the 11th of March, 1833, in his forty-seventh year, leaving the work which he had so well begun for others to bring to an end.

⁸ In the same Letter

This is what we proposed to ourselves, viz. to carry on what Passow had begun. We perceive that others are doing the same in Germany.*

We at first thought of a translation of Passow's Work, with additions. But a little experience showed us that this would not be sufficient. Passow indeed had done all that was necessary for Homer and Hesiod, so that his Work has become a regular authority in Germany for the old Epic Greek.⁴ But he had done nothing farther completely. For though in the Fourth Edition he professes to have done for Herodotus the same as for Homer, this is not quite the case. He had done little more than use Schweighäuser's Lexicon—which is an excellent book, and leaves little of the peculiar phraseology of Herodotus unnoticed, but is very far indeed from being a complete vocabulary of the author.⁵ One of us, accordingly, undertook to read Herodotus carefully through, adding what was lacking to the margin of his Schweighäuser. The other did much the same for Thucydides. And between us, we have gone through the Fragments of the early Poets, Lyric, Elegiac, etc., which were not in the Poëtae Minores of Gaisford; as well as those of the early Historic and Philosophic Writers; and those of the Attic, Tragic, and Comic Poets, which were dispersed through Athenæus, Stobæus, etc. We have referred to the latter as collected by Meineke, so far as his collection was published when we began printing. But besides all our own reading and collections, we have made unflinching use of the best Lexicons and Indexes of the great Attic writers, Wellauer's of Æschylus,⁷ Ellendt's of Sophocles, Beck's of Euripides, Caravella's of Aristophanes, Ast's of Plato, Sturz's of Xenophon, with Reiske's and Mitchell's of the Attic orators. The reader will see by this that we have thrown our chief strength on the phraseology of the Attic writers. We have also sedulously consulted Böckh's Index to Pindar; and for Hippocrates, who ought to be closely joined

⁴ A Lexicon professedly based on Passow's was begun in 1836 (Leipsig, 8v.) by Pinzger, and continued by Seiler and Jacobitz. We have only seen the first Three Numbers. Works of more promise have been begun, one by Rost and Palm (Handwörterbuch d. griech. Sprache, begründet von Franz Passow. Leipsig, roy. 8v.); the other by F. Pape, (Braunschweig, roy. 8v.) Of these the former half has appeared. Of course we have not been able to make any use of them.

when he differs from him. And all late German critical works are full of references to Passow's Lexicon.

⁷ Mr. Linwood's came too late for us to be able to make any use of it. († It has been used in the American edition, and in the 2d English edition. ‡) with Herodotus, we have used Foësius' Œconomia, with the references in the Index of the Oxford Scapula. But we want a good critical revision of this Author to make his text of authority in elucidating the Ionic dialect. After the Attic writers, Greek under goes a great change; which begins to appear strongly about the time of Alexander. Aristotle's language strikes us at once as something quite different from that of his master Plato, though the change of styles cannot be measured quite chronologically; as, for instance, Demosthenes was contemporary with Aristotle; yet his style is the purest Attic. Here, as in painting, architecture, etc., there are transition periods—the old partly surviving, the new just appearing. But the change is complete in Polybius, with the later Historic Writers, and Plutarch. We have therefore not been anxious to amass authorities from these authors, though we have endeavored to collect their peculiar words and phrases.¹ For Aristotle, we have used Sylburg's Indexes, and those in the Oxford editions of the Rhetoric and Ethics; for Theophrastus, Schneider's Index; for Polybius (of course), Schweighäuser's Lexicon; for Plutarch, Wytttenbach's Index. Attic phraseology revives more or less in Lucian; but for that reason most of his phrases have earlier examples, though in some of his works (as the Verae Historiae, Tragopodagra, Lexiphanes, etc.) many new or rare words occur. We have taken them from Geel's Index to the Edition of Hemsterhuis and Reiz. But in these, and writers of a like stamp, we have seldom been careful to add the special reference, being usually content with giving the name of the author.² Another class of writers belongs to Alexandria. We have not neglected these. The reader will find the Greek of Theocritus pretty fully handled; and he will not turn in vain to seek the unusual words introduced by the learned Epic school of that city, Callimachus, Apollonius, etc., or by that whole sale coiner Lycophron. We have also been careful to notice such words as occur first, or in any unusual sense in the Alexandrian version of the Old Testament, and in the New Testament. We must not omit to mention, that in the first part, viz. from B to K inclusive, we have been saved much labor, and have very much enriched our Lexicon by consulting Hase and Dindorf's New Edition of Stephani Thesaurus. We only wish we could have had their assistance for the whole.

* † This is a strange oversight on the part of the Oxford editors, and the more surprising that it has been allowed to stand uncorrected in the 2d edition: the statement made in their note is too general, and does great injustice to the laborious and accurate Passow; the editors can merely mean that Passow has not given the Herodotean significations of these words, or that he has omitted the references to Hdt., for the words themselves are all in his Lexicon, except ἐλέγχομαι, and ἐπαπονίζομαι, which two also are not given in the Oxford Lexicon (the ref. under ἐλέγγω to Hdt. are for that form): in the former case the statement is erroneous, inasmuch as the Hdt. signs. are given by Passow to all these words, as they stand in the Oxford Lexicon, except not so fully to ἐπάνω, ἐπειξέρομαι, and ἐπεξενρίσσω have in Passow a reference to Hdt.; while with regard to the very first word quoted, ἐλασσών, no reference is made to Hdt. in either Lexicon, but the Oxford editors have based theirs on Passow's, adopting even the erroneous reference at the end to ἡσσών.

We think it should be particularly noticed, that *all passages quoted have been specially verified on the Proof Sheets, and the references uniformly made to the same Edition.*³ We can thus at least (barring human accidents) insure correctness of quotation; so that those who doubt our authority may really be able to satisfy themselves. And here let us make full acknowledgment, and give our best thanks to George Marshall, M.A., Student of Christ Church, who has relieved us of the heaviest part of this most laborious and irksome task. We will guarantee his accuracy at the hazard of our own.

Such is a brief sketch of what we have done. It remains to say something on the manner, how we have attempted to do it.

Our Plan has been that marked out and begun by Passow, viz. to make each Article a History of the usage of the word referred to. That is, we have always sought to give the earliest authority for its use first. Then, if no change was introduced by later writers, we have left it with that early authority alone—adding, however, whether it continued in general use or no, and taking care to specify, whether it was common to Prose and Poetry, or confined to one only. In most cases the word will tell its own story: the passages quoted will themselves say whether it continued in use, and whether it was used or no both in Poetry and Prose; for there are few words that do not change their significations more or less in the downward course of Time, and few therefore that do not need many references. It will be understood that deviations from the strict Historical order must occur. Homer sometimes uses a word in a metaphorical sense only, the literal sense of which first occurs (perhaps) in Plato. In such instances, of course, we give the literal and actual sense the preference.⁴ The old Epic part we have left nearly, as we found it, in the hands of Passow. Some few errors we have corrected (but there were not many); and we have simplified Passow's account of the Homeric usages; for he was too fond of refining, and making distinctions of signification, which depended wholly on the context. But we have never been anxious to alter for altering's sake. All post-Homeric words have been remodelled, and those references are made to the old Edition. We ought to have altered these, but have not. (†This change has been made in a great measure in the American edition, and in the 2d English, but not completely.†) of Attic stamp, mostly re-written. We should here except the articles on the Propositions, Conjunctions, and Particles, which Passow had (from the first) wrought out with true German diligence. Our work here has been chiefly to compress, and simplify; often referring to Grammatical Works, for matter that comes more properly into their sphere than into that of Lexicography. Many will think we might have well carried this pruning system further; and we believe so too. Statements on points of Criticism will be found supported by reference to the critical writers of chief authority; and here we have endeavored to refer to those whose works are most within reach of English Readers.

² (†Vide foreg. note.†)

We think then that we have the same right to call our Book, A Lexicon, etc., "based on the Work of Passow," that he had to eject the name of Schneider altogether from his Title-page. Our object is not to claim undue honor, but to give as accurate a Title to the Work as we can.

In the Arrangement, it will be found, that the Grammatical Forms come first. Then the Root, primary, or secondary, inclosed in curved brackets (); except when it is necessary to speak at length on the Derivation, which will then be found at the end of the article. Then the Interpretation of the word, with examples, etc. Lastly, remarks on the Prosody, when necessary, inclosed in square brackets []. This also we have borrowed from Passow; though he did not observe the first part very strictly; for his Grammatical Forms are often at the end, or mixed up with the Interpretation.

All irregular, with some not obviously regular, Tenses will be found in their own alphabetical place, with reference to the Verb they belong to. Epic, as well as Doric, Aeolic and other dialectic forms may be similarly found; with reference to the Attic form under which (generally) they are discussed.

The Tenses of Compound Verbs will be found under the Simple forms, except where the Compound Verb itself has anything peculiar.

Adverbs must be sought at the end of their Adjectives.

In Etymology we have departed widely from Passow. He had adopted a modification of Hemsterhuis' system, referring all words to imaginary primitive Verbs, and inserting these Verbs in their alphabetical places. We have dismissed most of these, retaining such only as are actually implied in some extant tense of the Verb or some Derivative as for instance, ΘΕΩ is implied in θήσω (the fut. of τίθημι), ΕΩ in ἤσω (of ἵημι), ΓΕΝΩ in γέγονα, γόνος, and so forth. Otherwise we have recognized the Root in the simplest forms of the Verb (usually the aor. 2) or Derivatives. For instance, we do not refer λαμβάνω to the imaginary ΛΑΩ, but to the Root ΛΑΒ-, β being clearly part of the Root, as is shown by the aor. 2, by λαβή, by λαύω (i. e. λάβω), etc. The extant Roots or the Forms nearest them, we have printed in capitals. Words not extant are marked by asterisks. Lastly, we have introduced a little Comparative Etymology, by quoting kindred Roots from Sanscrit, and other of the great family of Indo-European Tongues. Of course we have not at all done this completely. We have only endeavored to call attention to the subject; to stimulate curiosity, rather than satisfy it. In this department we are chiefly indebted to Pott's Etymologische Forschungen auf dem Gebiete der Indo-Germanischen Sprachen (Lemgo 1833—1836), 2 vols. 8vo.

In the Translations of the Greek terms, we have been anxious to use genuine Saxon-English words, rather than their Latin equivalents.

Articles of Archeology have been in all cases re-written, with especial attention to the law-phrases of the Orators. We have endeavored here to give a summary of all essentials, referring for details to other Books. We might have been content to refer, once for all, to the Dictionary of Antiquities, lately completed under the direction of Dr. Smith; but this very useful Book was not nearly finished when we went to press.

Many may be surprised to find details of Mythology under some words, as Ἀπόλλων, Ζεύς, etc. These are retained from Passow, though curtailed. If the Dictionary of Mythology and Biography, lately begun under Dr. Smith's direction, had been finished, we might probably have cancelled them altogether.

Some Proper Names will be found. Passow had inserted all the Homeric and Hesiodic names. We have left such only as had in themselves some force and significance, or presented anything remarkable in their grammatical forms.¹

In all these last mentioned cases it is difficult to draw a line between what is essential to general Lexicography and what is not. We have done this to the best of our judgment, and if the line waves more or less, we must shelter ourselves under the plea that it could hardly be otherwise.

We subjoin an Alphabetical Catalogue of Authors quoted, together with a note of the Edition used, to which (as above stated) we have been careful to make uniform reference. The date of each Author's "floruit" is added in the margin; and by comparing this with the short summary of the chief Epochs of Greek Literature prefixed to the Catalogue, it will be easy to determine the time of a word's first usage, and of its subsequent changes of signification. It will be understood, however, that the age of a word does not wholly depend on that of its Author. For, first, many Greek books have been lost; secondly, a word, of Attic stamp, first occurring in Lucian, or later imitators of Attic Greek, may be considered as actually older than those found in the vernacular writers of the Alexandrian age. Further, the Language changed differently in different places at the same time; as in the cases of Demosthenes and Aristotle (noticed above, p. xx), whom we have been compelled to place in different Epochs. And at the same place, as Athens, there were naturally two parties, one clinging to old usages, the other fond of what was new. The Greek of Thucydides and Lysias may be compared in illustration of this remark. We may add, that though the term "flourished" is vague, it is yet the only one available, if we wish to observe the influence of any particular Writer on Language and Literature. We may seem to have been capricious in assigning some of the Dates; but it has been done, always, by comparing such notices as have come to us respecting the author in question, and that chiefly by the aid of Mr. Fynes Clinton's Fasti Hellenici, for the period which that work embraces.

Before concluding, we beg to thank all Friends who have assisted us by advice or information. We must also make full acknowledgments to the Delegates of the University Press for the readiness with which they received our Work. And especially we must express our gratitude to the Dean of Christ Church for the kindness he has shown us, and the interest he has taken in the progress of our Book.

We now dismiss our Book with feelings of thankfulness that we have had health and strength to bring it to a close. We know well how far it is from what it might be, from what we ourselves could imagine it to be. But we hope that by pains and accuracy we have at least laid a good foundation; and we shall be ready to profit by any criticisms that may be made upon it, whether public or private. For the present we shall be content if it shall in any sort serve that end of which we spoke in the outset; if, that is, it shall tend to cherish or improve the accurate study of the classical writers of Greece. We cannot look for much more. For the Writer of Dictionaries, says Johnson, in his Preface, has been "considered not the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the path, through which learning and genius press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress." His labors have been compared to "those of the anvil and the mine;" or even worse—

condendaque Lexica mandat
Damnatis, poenam pro poenis omnibus unam.

But our own great English Lexicographer, who with his gloomy mind delighted to heap reproaches upon himself, has himself also removed much of that reproach by the noble work which will carry his name wherever the English tongue is spoken. And we at least are well pleased to think that, if our book prove useful, it has been our lot to follow, however humbly, in the same career of usefulness that he chose for his own.

IV. SIGNS, ETC.

==, equal or equivalent to, the same as.

() Between these brackets stand the Etymological remarks; either immediately after the Word to be explained, or (if they run to any length) at the end of the Article.

Words in Capital Letters are Roots or presumed Roots.

c acc. cognato, is applied where the accusative is of the same or cognate signification with the Verb, as, ἐβρίκειν, ἔναι ὁδόν, etc.

Tenses "from" a Verb are those of which the pres. contains the Root. Tenses "of" a Verb, those of which the Root is different from the present: e. g. ἔρξω is future from τρέχω, but ὁραμῶμαι of it.

When a word is compounded without any change or inflexion of the simple, this latter is omitted; e. g. ἡ τριπλάλαι we do not insert (πάλαι). † In the Am. edition the parts of the compound have been given in full.

* This denotes a word not found in actual use.

 † These marks are used to indicate the additions of the Am. editor as explained in Preface

A, α, ἄλφα, τό, indecl., first letter of the Gr. Alphabet: hence as Numeral, α' = εἰς and πρῶτος, but α = 1000.

Changes of a in the dialects:—I. 'ον, ā into η, as, σοφία νεανίας πράσ-ω ἄρρ, into σοφία νεανίης πρήσσω ἄρρ, Greg. Cor. Dial. Ion. 1, 10, 45: but ā very rarely into η, as τεσσαράκοντα into τεσσερήκοντα.—II. Dor., ā in the verbal termin. ᾶτο (contr. for ᾷτο) becomes η, as, ἐκνήζητο, Koen Greg. p. 265.—III. Aeol. and Dor., ā in masc. and fem. termin. of part. aor. 1 becomes αι, as, ὀλέσαις ὑπαντρίξαισα, Koen Greg. p. 210, Böckh v. 1. Pind. O. 1, 79:—sometimes also in adjs. in ας, as μέλας τάλας.—2. Ion. also in some compds. α becomes αι, as, Θηβαγενής ἰθαγενής for Θηβαγενής ἰθαγενής, Koen Greg. p. 294.—3. sometimes also ā becomes αι, as in the termin. of the prep. διὰ, παρά!—cf. ἀέτος, αἰέ.—IV. Ion. a into ε, as, βάρανθρον ἄρσιν into βέρεθρον ἔρσιν: esp. in verbal termin. ᾶω, as, ὀρέω, φοιτέω for ὀρέω φούτῳ.—V. Aeol. and Dor., ā sometimes into ο, as, στροτός ὄνω ὀνεχώρησεν for στρατός ἄνω ἄνεχώρησεν, Koen Greg. p. 455, 600, Böckh Inscr. 1, p. 9.—VI. on the interchange of a and ω, v. sub ω.

α, as insepr. prefix in compos.—I. α στερητικόν, alpha privativum, expressing want or absence, like Lat. in-, Engl. un-, as, σοφός, wise, ἄσοφος, unwise. Sometimes it implies blame, as ἀβουλία, = ὀνέβουλία, ill-counsel, ἀπρόσωπος, ill-faced, ugly, Bast. Greg. p. 893:—strictly a hyperbole, counsel that is no counsel, i. e. bad, a face no better than none, i. e. ugly. This a may precede a vowel, as, ἀέκων ἄελπτος, †and sometimes forms a contraction with the following vowel when ε, as ἄκων, ἄροχέ†, yet before a vowel ᾶν- is more common, v. sub ᾶν-. It answers to the adv. ἄνευ, and so adjs. formed with it oft. take a gen., as, ἀλαμπές ἡλίου, ἄνατος κακῶν, = ἄνευ λάμψεως ἡλίου, ἄνευ ἄτης κακῶν, esp. in Trag., Schäf. Mel. p. 137. †This a does not admit of composition with verbs; those verbs in which it is found are to be regarded as derived from adjectives, etc., Scalig. ap. Lob. Phryn. p. 266†.

II. α ἄθροιστικόν, alpha copulativum, expressing union or participation, as, ἄκοιτις ἄλοχος ἀδελφός ἀκόλονθος, cf. Koen Greg. p. 344: †it also expresses equality, likeness, as ἀτάλαντος, and assemblage or collection in one place, as ἄπαντες, ἄθροός; v. Kühner Gr. Gr. § 380, 8; Jelf § 335, 2, 0†. It answers to the adv. ἄμα, and may be again traced in ὁμοί-, δ-, as, ὁμοίος ὁπάτριος ὁγάτριος. Akin to it seems

III. α ἐπιτακτικόν, alpha intensivum, strengthening the force of compds., and said to answer to the adv. ἄν, very. The use of this a has been most unduly extended by the old Gramm.; many words quoted as examples seem to be inventions of their own, as, ἄγονος ἀγύμναστος for πολύγονος πολυγύμναστος, Valck. Adon. p. 214; some words have been referred to this a which belong to a privative, as, ἀδάκρυτος ἀδέσφατος ἄζυλος, etc. (v. sub vocc.); and in those which remain, as, ἄσκιος ἀτενής ἄσπερχές ἄσκελές, etc., it may well be asked whether the a be any more than a modification of a copulat., just as the Sanscrit sa-, which belongs to the same root as ἄμα, simul, and therefore is strictly copulative, has also an intensive force; v. Kühner Gr. Gr. § 380 D, and more at length Döderlein de a intensivo (Erlangen 1830).

IV. a euphonicum, in Ion. and Att., is used merely to soften the pronunciation, mostly before two consonants, as, ἀβληχρός ἄσπαιρω ἄσπαφς ἄστεροπή for βληχρός σπαιρω σπαφς στεροπή: yet sometimes before one, esp. μ, as, ἄμειρομαι for μείρομαι, Coray ἄτακτα 2, p. 1. [a is short in all these cases, except by position: yet a is used long in the adjs. ἄθινατος, ἀκάματος by Ep. Poets, to admit them into the hexam.: so also in ἄπύλαμος in Hes., cf. Spitzn. Vers. Heroic. p. 73. This license is also used sparingly, by the Trag., Pors. Med. 139, Elmsl. Ar. Ach. 47.]

'A, ᾶ, exclamations used singly or repeated, to express various strong emotions, as our ah! does pain, and ha! surprise.

† ἈΔΔΑ', conjunct., neut. pl. from ἄλλος, though with changed accent, and so strictly in another way, other wise: ἄλλὰ therefore introduces something different from what was before said, and serves to limit or oppose whole sentences or single clauses.—I. in opposing single clauses, but, Lat. autem, freq. from Hom downwards; in this case it always stands first except in late poets, as Call. Ep. 5, 11, Κλεινίον ἄλλὰ θυγατρὶ δίδου χάριν.—When two clauses are strongly opposed ἄλλὰ is preceded by μέν if affirmative, by οὐ μόνον if negative, ἐνθ' ἄλλοι μὲν πάντες ἐπενοήμηνσαν Ἀχαιοὶ, ἄλλὰ οὐκ Ἀτρεΐδῃ Ἀγαμέμνονι, ἦνδανε θυμῷ, Il. 1, 24; οὐ μόνον ὕπας ἄλλὰ πολλῶν, Plat. Phaedr. 228 A: but in the latter case, to heighten the opposition καὶ usu. follows ἄλλὰ, as Xen. Mem. 1, 4, 13; 2, 7, 6: ἄλλὰ καὶ is also found after οὐδέ, οὐδέεις, etc., without μόνον, Wolf Leptin. 460, 2: so too οὐχ (μή) ὅτι, οὐχ (μή) ὅπως, are followed by ἄλλὰ, ἄλλὰ καί, not only, but, etc.—The first clause is also oft. strengthened by various particles, as τοί, ἡ, τοι, etc., and ἄλλὰ by the addition of γέ or ὁμως—Special usages of ἄλλὰ with single clauses.—I. in hypothet. sentences, the apodosis is oft. opp. to the protasis by ἄλλὰ, ἄλλὰ καί, ἄλλὰ περ, yet, still, at least, Il. 1, 281; 8, 154; 12, 349, etc.: so after εἴπερ τε, ..., ἄλλὰ τε, ..., Il. 10, 226, ἄλλὰ τε καί, ..., Il. 1, 81: also in prose after εἰ, ..., ἄλλὰ, or ἢ, ..., γέ, Plat. Phaed. 91 B, Gorg. 470 D, etc. Sometimes also after conjunctions of time, as after ἐπειδὴ, Od. 14, 151, after ἐπεὶ, Soph. O. C. 241.—2. in post-Hom. authors, ἄλλὰ is sometimes attached to a single word, when it may be rendered at least, but in fact the usage is elliptic, and may be explained from the foregoing, as in Soph. El. 411, ὁ θεοὶ πα τρωῶν, συγγένεσθ' ὃ ἄλλὰ νῦν, i. e. εἰ μὴ πρότερον συγγένεσθαι, ἄλλὰ νῦν γε συγγένεσθαι, cf. Id. O. C. 1276: this usage is very freq. in Trag.: γε is usu. added to the emphatic wd., but not always, as Soph. Ant. 552.—3. also post-Hom. is the usage of ἄλλ' ἢ, but as this is in full not ἄλλὰ ἢ, but ἄλλο ἢ, v. sub ἄλλ' ἢ.—II. to oppose whole sentences, but, yet, Lat. at.—1. freq. in quick transitions from one subject to another, as in Il. 1, 134, 140, etc.: so too ἄλλ' οὐδ' ὥς, ..., Od. 1, 6.—Post-Hom. also in quick answers and objections, nay but, well but, ..., mostly in negation, as Ar. Ach. 402, but not always, as e.g. Plat. Protag. 330 B, Gorg. 449 A: the ob jection also takes the form of a question, and is sometimes repeated, as πότερον ἔχουν τί σε...; ἄλλ' ἀπὸ τῶν; ἄλλὰ περὶ παιδικῶν μαχόμενοι; ἄλλὰ μεθύνοντες ἐπαρῶντες; Xen. An. 5, 8, 4, where all after the first may be rendered by or: in such questions ἄλλὰ is oft. strengthd. and becomes ἄλλ' ἢ; Lat. ergo? Elmsl. Heracl. 426: Hom. also has ἄλλὰ at the beginning of a speech, to introduce some general objection, Od. 4, 472, cf. Xen. Symp. init.—2. ἄλλὰ is used, esp. by Hom., c. imperat., to εἰσαγγεῖν, persuade, etc., like Lat. itaque, esp. ἄλλ' ἴθι, ἄλλ' ἄγε, ἄλλὰ ἴωμεν, ἄλλὰ πίθεσθε, Hom.: the vocat. sometimes goes before ἄλλὰ, as ὦ Φίντις, ἄλλὰ εὖζων, Pind. O. 6, 37.—3. a number of Attic phrases may be referred to this head, as elliptic, οὐ μὴν ἄλλὰ, οὐ μέντοι ἄλλὰ..., it is not (so) but..., e. g. Xen. Cyr. 1, 4, 8, ὁ ἵππος πίπτει καὶ μικροῦ αὐτὸν ἐξετραχίλisen· οὐ μὴν (sc. ἐξετραχίλisen) ἄλλ' ἐπέμεινεν ὁ Κύρως, it did not, however (throw him), but..., on the contrary.—III. joined with other particles, ἄλλὰ and the other particles retain their proper force, as—1. ἄλλ' ἄρα, much like ἄλλὰ in quick transition, Il. 6, 418; 12, 320, but in Att. to introduce an objection founded on something foregone, Plat. Apol. 25 A, also ἄλλ' ἄρα, Id. Rep. 381 B.—2. ἄλλ' οὖν, but then, however, Hdt. 3, 140, etc.; also in apodosis, yet at any rate, ἄλλ' οὖν γε, Plat. Phaed. 91 B.—3. ἄλλὰ γάρ, Lat. enimvero, but really, certainly, but this phrase is really irregular, as Eur. Phoen. 1307, ἄλλὰ γάρ Κρέοντα λεύσσω... παύσω γόνους, should strictly be ἄλλὰ, Κρέοντα γάρ λεύσσω, παύσω γόνους, and so we find the collocation in Soph. Phil. 81, cf. Elmsl. Heracl. 481; so that usu. ἄλλὰ γάρ stands for ἄλλ' ἔπει: this phrase is opp. to οὐ γάρ ἄλλὰ: also ἄλλὰ γὰρ ὅτ', ἄλλὰ γὰρ τοι, Soph. Aj. 167 Phil. 81—4. ἄλλὰ is followed by many words that merely strengthen it, as ἄλλ' ἦτοι, Hom., ἔλλά τοι, Soph., etc.

(Some take it as compd. with κότος as if, like ὄργη, = ἡθος: others assume a transposition of letters for: ἄλλότοκος, differently produced.)

ἈΛΛΟΜΑΙ*, fut. ἄλλομαι, Dor. ἄλλεμαι; aor. 1 ἡλᾶμην, inf. ἄλλεσθαι [αῖ]: aor. 2 ἡλᾶμην, inf. ἄλλεσθαι (though Herm. Soph. O. T. 1311 rejects the indic. aor. 2): syncope 2 and 3 pers. ἄλλο, ἄλτο; and the part. ἄλμενος only in compds., (the only part of the verb that takes a smooth breathing): subj. ἄλῃται and ἄλεται Il. 11, 192 [with αῖ]. ἈΛΛΟΞ*, ἡ, ο, Lat. ALIUS, another, i. e. one besides what has been mentioned: when joined with a subst., that subst. is either in same case, or in gen., so ἄλλος Ἀχαιός or Ἀχαιοί, ἄνδρων ἄλλος, or βρότος ἄλλος, Hom., etc.: ἄλλος μέν., ἄλλος δέ., one., another., or the one., the other., Il. 22, 493, and Att.; but also ο μέν., ἄλλος δέ., Il. 6, 147 and Att.; ἕτερος μέν., ἄλλος δέ., Il. 9, 313, ἄλλος μέν., ἕτερος δέ., Hdt. 1, 32, ο μέν ἕτερος., ο δ' ἄλλος, Eur. I. T. 962; but ἄλλοι in plur. only stands in the second clause, Spitzn. Il. 9, 594. The following usages may be distinguished:—1. ἄλλος τις, or τις ἄλλος, any other, some other, Hom.: οὐδείς ἄλλος, no other, ἄλλοι πολλοί or πολλοὶ ἄλλοι, or πολλοὶ καὶ ἄλλοι, many others, Att.: εἰ τις ἄλλος, Lat. si quis alius, Thuc. 6, 32, also εἰ τις καὶ ἄλλος, Xen.: oft. followed by τις, with a compar. force οὐδὲν ἄλλο (or ἄλλο οὐδὲν) ἤ., nothing else than., Xen.; esp. in questions τί ἄλλο ἡ.; what else (is it) than.? i. e. it can be nothing else, Thuc. 3, 39, etc., cf. ἄλλοτι.—2. ἄλλος is oft. joined with other of its own cases or adverbs derived from

It, as ἄλλος ἄλλο λέγει, one man says one thing, one another, i. e. different men say different things; so too ἄλλος ἄλλοι, one here, another there, II. 2, 804; νέμει γέρα ἄλλοισιν ἄλλα, distributes one reward to one, another to another, i. e. different rewards to different persons, Aesch. Pr. 230; ἄλλος ἄλλῃ, ἄλλοθεν, ἄλλοσε, ἄλλοτε, etc., Hom., and Att.: the plur. ἄλλοι is used in the same way: ἄλλος is also joined with ἕτερος, as Soph. El. 739, Plat. Legg. 849 E, Theocr. 7, 36: ἄλλος καὶ ἄλλος, another and then another, Xen. An. 1, 5, 12; ἄλλος ἀνέστη ὁμοίως καὶ ἄλλος, Id. 7, 6, 10; ἄλλην καὶ ἄλλην ἥδονην δύνειν, to pursue one pleasure after another, Xen. Cyr. 4, 1, 15; ἄλλος ἄλλος τρόπος, quite another sort, Eur. II. 2, 1: τὰ ἄλλα, contr. τῶλλα or (as Wolf, Anal. 2, p. 431 would have it) τῶλλα, Lat. cetera reliqua, never alia, Hom., etc., in Att. oft. used adv. for the rest, sometimes also of time—τὸν ἄλλον χρόνον, Xen. Hell. 3, 2, 2; where observe that ὁ ἄλλος χρόνος is usu. said of past time, ὁ λοιπὸς χρ. of future, Wolf Leptin. 462, 1, but ὁ ἄλλος χρ. is sometimes said of future, as Lys. 139, 45: οἱ τε ἄλλοι καί, τὰ τε ἄλλα καί, all others and especially, Hdt. 1, 1, etc.: τὸ ἄλλο is much less freq. than τὰ ἄλλα.—4. ἄλλος is used with numerals, when it must be rendered by yet, still, further, etc., πέμπτος ποταμὸς ἄλλος, yet a fifth river, Hdt. 4, 54, cf. Aesch. Theb. 486, Soph. Ant. 1295; so too ἄλλος ἕτερος, yet a second one more, Eur. Or. 345; so too in enumerating several objects, where it is often seemingly pleonast., as ἡμᾶ τῆγε καὶ ὑφιπόλοιο κίον ἄλλα, with her mistress came attendants also, Od. 6, 84, cf. 9, 367; 13, 266; so freq. in Att. οὐ γὰρ ἦν χροῖτος οὐδὲ ἄλλο δένδρον οὐδὲν, there was no grass nor besides was there a single tree, Xen. An. 1, 5, 5, cf. Herm. Soph. Phil. 38, Heind. Plat. Gorg. 473 D, Stallb. Plat. Apol. 36 B: Hom. also oft. has it almost pleonast. with compar., οὕτως σείο νεώτερος ἄλλος Ἀχαιῶν, II. 15, 569, cf. 22, 106, etc.; also with πλεονέξιος, II. 4, 81, etc., with εἰς or μόνος, Eur. Med. 945, Plat. Charm. 166 E.—On the other hand ἄλλος is said to be omitted in phrases like ὁ Ζεὺ καὶ θεοί, Ar. Plut. 1, cf. Schäf. Bos Elips. p. 847.—II. much more rarely like ἄλλοιος, of other sort, different, II. 13, 64; 21, 22: in this signf. it is oft. used like a compar., c. gen., as ἄλλα τῶν δικαίων, other than what is just, Xen. Mem. 4, 4, 25; so also followed by ἦ, Hdt. 1, 49, etc., by πλὴν, Soph. Aj. 125, Ar. Ach. 39; also by prepositions, as ἀντί, Aesch. Pr. 467, παρὰ, Plat. Phaed. 80 B, etc.: and when joined with a negat., sometimes by ἄλλά, II. 18, 403; 21, 275; 24, 697: hence come several secondary signfs.—1. other than what is common, strange, foreign, ἄλλος οδότης, Od. 23, 274.—2. other than what is, i. e. untrue, unreal, Od. 4, 348; 17, 139.—3. other than what is right, wrong, bad, like ἕτερος, and Lat. alius, secus, sequior, Plut., cf. ἄλλος.

Op. 588, or (as others) = ἀμολγαῖα, shepherd's bread, country bread, or = ἀκάμια, since ἀμολγός is said to be Achaean for ἀκμή, and so bread that is perfectly baked, a cake raised by yeast or the like, which last interpr. is adopted by Buttm. Lexil. p. 90, 91, who also in Leon. Tar. 98 takes ἀμολγαῖον μαστόν to be an udder in its ἀκμή, i. e. a distended udder. But in Or. Sib. 4, 214 ἀμολγῆος is certainly dark, gloomy. Cf. ἀμολγός.*

Hom. Merc. 7: ἄμολγός, and so later, as in Orph. Hymn. 33, 12, ἀμολγ. without νυκτός:—νυκτός ἀμολγόν also occurs in Aesch. Fr. 64, and Eur. is said by Hesych. to have used ἄμ. as an adj., νυκτα ἀμολγόν = οφθαλμοσκοτεινόν, but in Eur. Phaeth. 2, 2, 6 (where it stands alone) Herm. explains it by quicquid turbidum est.—From this last passage Herm. infers the orig. signf. to be the thick part of milk, and so thickness, darkness, etc., Opusc. 3, p. 137 sq.—Buttm. Lexil. in v. rejects all deriv. from ἀμέλγω as childish, and follows Eustath. Il. 15, 324, who says that ἀμολγός is an old Achaean word for ἀκμή, and so νυκτός ἄμ. would be the depth or dead of night, though not necessarily midnight, cf. ἀμολγῆος. Cf. also ἀμολγός.

Od. 8, 525: the dat. is oft. omitted as εἰς θεῶν ὅς λογιὸν ἀμύνει, Il. 5, 603: again the acc. is omitted (though λογιὸν or the like may easily be supplied), and then the verb may be rendered to defend, fight for, aid, succour, ἀμύνεμεναι ὥρεσσι, to fight for wives, i. e. to ward off destruction from, Il. 5, 486, cf. Od. 11, 500: for dat. we oft. have gen., as Τρῶας ἀμύνει νεῶν, he kept the Trojans off from the ships, Il. 15, 731, cf. 12, 402: in the passage δαναῶν ἀπὸ λογιὸν ἀμύναι, Il. 10, 75, Od. 17, 538, it is usu. written ἄπο, as if the prep. belonged to δαναῶν: but here as in Il. 1, 67, ἠμύν' ἀπὸ λογιὸν ἀμύναι, acc. to Hom. usage ἄπο is an adv. and denotes the direction of the action expressed by the verb with relation to the object which stands in the gen. or dat., cf. Jelf's Gr. Gr. § 614, seq., 640, Anthon's Homer, Exc. 2., and Spitzn. Mid. to keep or ward off from one's sight, to guard, defend one's self, oft. with collat. notion of requital, revenge, either absol., as Il. 16, 556, or c. acc. rei, ἀμύνετο νηλεῖς ἥμαρ, Il. 13, 514, so too in Hdt. 1, 80; 3, 158, etc.: that from which danger is ward off in gen., as in act., ἀμύνοντο σφῶν αὐτῶν, Il. 12, 155, νῆων ἡμύνοντο, Ib. 179: also with περί, ἀμύνεσθαι περί πάτρης, Il. 12, 243, so too in prose, περί τῶν οἰκείων, Thuc. 2, 39, also ὑπὲρ τῶν, Xen. A. C. GEN., rare in prose. I. Causal, like ἐνεκα, about, for, for the sake of a thing, ἀμφί πίδακος μάχεσθαι, to fight for the possession of a spring, Il. 16, 825. Pleonast., ἀμφί σούνεκα, v. Herm. Soph. Phil. 550, where however others ἀμφί σου νέα (cf. Wunder, not crit. ad v. 546).—2. about, i. e. concerning a thing, of it, like περί, c. gen. and circa for de, only once in Hom.: ἀμφί φιλότῳσι αἰεῖν, to sing of love, Od. 8, 267, once too in Hdt. 6, 131, more freq. in Pind.—II. of place, about, around, round about, is a post-Hom. usage, ἀμφί ταύτης τῆς πόλεως, Hdt. 8, 104, cf. Schäf. Diou. Comp. p. 351.

B. C. DAT. I. of place, about, around round about, ἀμφί κεφαλῇ, ὥμοις, στήθεσσι, about the head, etc., Hom., ἀμφί οἱ, around him, Il. 12, 396, μοι ἄμψ' αὐτόν, around me, Il. 9, 470, likewise ἀμφί περί στήθεσσι, Od. 11, 609.—all round, as κρέα ἀμφί ὀβελοῖς ἔπειραν, they fixed the meat on the spits, so that these were in the middle of it, Hom. Hence—2. the more general relation of place, at, by, near, with, like ἐπί, ἀμφί φάλῳ, on the helmet, Il. 3, 362: ἀμφί πυοί, on or by the fire, Il. 18, 344: ἀμψ' ἐμοί, by my side, Od. 11, 423, cf. Il. 4, 493, Soph. Aj. 562.—II. in Pind. of connexion or association in genl. without any distinct notion of place, ἀμφί σοῖσι, Pind. P. 1, 22, σου ἀμφί τρώπῳ, Pind. N. 1, 42, ἀμψ' Νεμέα.—III. as with su. signf. I. about, for, on account of,

for the sake of, ἀμψ' Ἑλένη μάχεσθαι, to fight for Helen, Il. 3, 70, ἀμψί γυναικί ἄλγεα πάσχειν, to suffer woes on account of a woman, Il. 3, 157: about, of, regarding, concerning, Il. 7, 408, Od. 1, 48, also freq. in Hdt.: also ἀμφί τινι λέγεσθαι, for the usu. περί τινος, e. g. θανάτῳ αὐτῆς λέγεται, of her death it is reported, Hdt. 3, 32.—2. hence the dat. denotes also the means, manner, or cause of a thing, ἀμφί θυμῷ, Soph., τάρβει, Aesch., prae ira, prae pavore, ἀμψ' ὀνύχουσι, by means of the talons, Hes. Op. 205, Jac. A. P. p. 664.

C. C. ACC., which is the most usu. in prose.—I. as with dat., about, around, on, at, mostly however with collat. notion of moving towards, Od. 10, 365.—2. of general relations of place, ἀμψ' ὕλα, by the sea, Il. 1, 409, ἀμψί δέσπρα, somewhere by the banks, Il. 2, 461, also ἀμφί περί κρήνην, somewhere about the fountain, Il. 2, 305, and περί πίδακος ἀμφί, Theocr. 7, 142, ἀμψί ὕστν, all about in the city, Il. 11, 706, ἀμψί τὰ μέσα, somewhere in the middle, so in Lat. circa Campaniam mittere, Liv.: οἱ ἀμφί Πρίαμον, Priam and his train, Il. 3, 146, cf. Hdt. 8, 25: but οἱ ἀμψί Μεγαρέας καὶ Φιλίστιον, Hdt. 9, 69, are the same as immediately afterwards οἱ Μεγαρέες καὶ Φιλίστιοι. Hence the peculiar Att. usage, οἱ ἀμφί Κρίτωνα, Crito (and no one else), less however as an individual than as the specimen of a class: so οἱ ἀμφί Πλάτωνα are, Plato and his followers, οἱ ἀμφί Εὐθύφωνα, Euthyphro and all his class, Heind. Plat. Crat. 399 E: later auth. use it for the mere individual, Herm. Vig. 6, so περί. But τὰ ἀμφί τι, that which concerns a thing, τὰ ἀμφί τὸν πόλεμον, war and all that belongs to it: very seldom κλαίειν ἀμφί τινα, to weep about or for one, Il. 18, 339, μήσασθαι ἀμφί τινα, to make mention of one, H. Hom. 6, 1.—II. a loose definition of time, space or magnitude, ἀμφί βίοντα, ἀμψ' ὅλον χρόνον, his life long, through the whole time, Pind., ἀμφί Πλειάδων ὀσίν, Aesch., ἀμφί δόρπιστον, Xen., ἀμφί τὰ τετταράκοντα ἔτη εἶναι, to be about forty years old, ἀμψί τῶς δώδεκα μυριάδων, about 120,000, circiter, Xen., just like εἰς except that the article follows ἀμφί, but not εἰς.—4. Att. phrase ἀμφί τι ἔχειν, with an adv., to set a value upon a thing, take care about a thing, take pains about it, be occupied about or with it. so εἶναι, διατρίβειν, στρατεύεσθαι ἀμφί τι: cf. περί.

D. WITHOUT CASE, as adv., about, around, round about, on all sides, very often in Hom., who often so places it that it may be either an independent adv., or separated by tmesis from a verb: e. g. Il. 5, 310: freq. the foreg. verb must be repeated, e. g. Od. 10, 218 from 217. Also ἀμφί περί as adv., Il. 21, 10.—2. = ἀμφίς 3, by one's self, apart, as χωρίς, δίχα, H. Hom. Cer. 85: but v. Butt. Lexil. p. 104.

AN, a particle which cannot be exactly rendered by any word in our language, though in particular cases it answers to Lat. forte, our probably, perchance, in all likelihood.—It always implies a condition, and therefore requires a verb either expressed or understood.—The Ep. and Lyr. particle κε, κεν, Dor. κα, are used in the same way: v. sub κε.

A. WITH INDICAT. ἄν makes a positive assertion conditional, or dependent on circumstances: hence—1. ἄν cannot be joined with pres. or perf., because that which is, or has been, cannot be made conditional: the passages where this appears to have been so, either have been corrected, or need correction, v. Elmsl. Med. 911.

—II. with fut. ἄν expresses that which certainly will happen, if something else happens first; this is freq. in old Ep., e. g. Il. 22, 66, but is rare, if not suspicious, in Att.: v. however Stallb. Plat. Rep. 615 D, Kühner Ausf. Gr. § 454, a, Schaff. Gregor. p. 66.—III. with imperf. and aorists, esp. imperf., ἄν stands—1. in independent propositions, to express a condition fulfilled as opportunity offered, conseq. repetition or frequency of an action in time past, e. g. ἔλεγεν ἄν, he was in the habit of saying, he would say.—2. with the same tenses and plapt., in apodosis to hypotheticals, when the condition is not yet fulfilled, nor likely to be so, as εἰ τι εἶχεν, εἶδον ἄν, εἰ τι ἔσχεν, ἔδοκεν ἄν, v. Buttm. Gr. § 139, 9. This condition is often expressed by a part., as Soph. Ant. 909, πόσις μὲν ἄν μοι καθανύοντος ἄλλος ἦν, for εἰ κατέθανεν. On ἄν after ἵνα with indic. v. sub ἵνα.

B. WITH OPTAT., with which ἄν is most common, it turns the wish, which the mood expresses, when alone, into a conditional assertion.—I. in propositions, where the antecedent is not expressed,—1. it implies general uncertainty, e. g. τοῦτο γένοιτο ἄν, this might be, it is possible:—this signif. becomes sometimes almost=fut., as οὐκ ἄν ἀποφεύγοις, you are not like to escape.—2. it marks prayers or commands, less strongly worded than by imperat., λέγοις ἄν, Soph., speak, if you will.—II. in apodosis to hypotheticals, as, εἰ τοῦτο ἔπραξεν, μέγα με ὠφελήσεν ἄν, if he had done this, he would have done me great service.—III. in dependent propositions, assigning time or cause, as Od. 4, 64, γένος ἐστὶ διοτρεφέων βασιλῶν—εἴπει οὐ κε κακοὶ τοιοῦνδε τέκοιεν.—IV. with the particles ὅπως, rarely ἵνα, Ion. ὅς and ὅσρα, to make the object indefinite, Hdt. 1, 75, διώρων ὅπως ὄρσεν, ὅπως ἄν λάβοι cf. Thuc. 7, 65. So Hom. uses εἰ κε in hypotheticals, e. g. Il. 5, 273, εἰ κε λάβοιμην, but εἰ ἄν Att. is very dub. v. Schn. Xen. An. 4, 1, 8, de Vect. 6, 2.

C. WITH SUBJUNCT. ἄν is not so much to be referred to the verb itself in this mood, as to the particle on which the verb depends, with which it often forms one word, as ἐπεῖν, ὅταν, ὅπταν, so πρὶν ἄν, εἰς ἄν δε ἄν quicunque, etc. The Homeric use of the subj. with ἄν nearly in a fut. sense must be excepted, as ἥς ὑπεροπλήσει τάχ' ἄν ποτε θυμὸν ὀλέσσει, he will quickly at some time in all likelihood lose his life through his overbearing insolence, Il. 1, 205.

D. Where ἄν appears to be joined with IMPERAT., it must be referred to some other word in the sentence, as Xen. An. 1, 4, 8, ἀλλ' ἴοντων ἄν εἰδότες ὅτι, where, acc. to Hermann, ἄν belongs to εἰδότες, as if for ἴοντων, καὶ εἰδέναι ἄν, i. e. εἰ ἴοιεν, εἰδέναι ἄν, but is om. by Porson and Dind.

E. WITH INFINIT. ἄν is used in cases where in recta oratione the indic. or optat. would appear with it, but not where they would reject it, e. g. ἐποίησ' ἄν, ἡμῖν ἐποίησαι, and ποιοῖμ' ἄν, οἶμαι ἄν ποιῆσαι.

F. WITH PARTICIPLE the same general observation holds good as with infinit. That of the aor. has a sort of future signif., and can only be rendered in Latin by that tense, as Xen. An. 5, 2, 8, ἐσκοπεῖτο... πότερον εἴη κρείττον ὑπάγειν... ὥς ἄλυντος ἄν τοῦ χωρίου: v. Matth. Eur. Hipp. 518.

G. GENERAL OBSS.—I. when the verb is wanting with ἄν, it can easily be supplied from the context, e. g. Soph. Phil. 947, οὐ γὰρ ἄν σθένοντα γε εἶλέν μ'· ἐπεὶ οὐδ' ἄν ὧδ' ἔχοντ', sc. εἶλέν.

II. ἄν is often doubled,—. when separated from its verb by several intervening words, as Soph. El. 333, ὥς τ' ἄν, εἰ σθένος λάβοιμι, δηλώσωμ' ἄν, or—2. where one ἄν belongs to the verb, and the other to some other word, e. g. Plat. Apol. 31 A, ἵμεῖς δ' ἴσως τάχ' ἄν ἀχθόμενοι, ὥσπερ οἱ νυστάζοντες ἐγερόμενοι, κρούσαντες ἄν μ., πειθόμενοι Ἄνθρω, ῥαδίως ἄν ἀποκτείναιτε, v. Kühn. Gr. Gr. § 458. This is most frequently the case with the neg. οὐκ and the particles compounded with it, which even when they stand in close connection with the verb, allow this repetition, as οὐκ' ἄν ἐφθάνω ἄν, Eur. Tro. 456, lb. Heracl. 721.—But still it is often found repeated without any such reason: even thrice, Soph. Fr. 789, πῶς ἄν οὐκ ἄν ἐν δίκῃ θάνομ' ἄν. So Hom. without particular reason, ἄν κεν, Il. 13, 127.—III. ἄν omitted,—1. in the Protasis, where it is necessarily implied by the Apodosis, as Plat. Symp. 198 C, ὀλίγον ἀποδράς, ὥχουμην εἰ πῦρ εἶχον, I had run away had I had anywhere to run.—2. in the Apodosis after a part., Plat. Rep. 450 D, πιστεύοντος μὲν γὰρ ἐμοῦ ἐμοὶ εἰδέναι ὁ λέγων, καλῶς εἶχεν ἡ παραμυθία.—3. after ἔως, ἄχρι, μέχρι, πρὶν, to make the time more indefinite, and in genl. after relat. pronouns and adverbs, chiefly poet., Pors. Med. 222, Or. 141, but also in prose, esp. in the earlier writers, v. Stallb. Plat. Phaed. 62 C.

H. POSITION OF ἄν.—It never begins a sentence, and regularly follows the word whose signif. it limits, as εἶχον ἄν, ἔχομ' ἄν, etc.: but when words dependent on the verb precede it in the sentence, ἄν may follow any of them, because in sense they follow the verb, as πρόσθεν ἄν εἶχον, =εἶχον ἄν πρόσθεν. The subjunct. indeed usu. follows ἄν, but there we have seen that ἄν limits not the verb but its particle.—In such cases as τί οὖν ἄν φαίη ὁ λόγος ἐτι ἰπιστεῖς for τί οὖν ἐτι ἀπιστεῖς, ὡμῇ ἄν ὁ λόγος, Plat. Phaed. 87 A, the sentence should be written without a comma: so also οὐκ οἶδ' ἄν ἐκείναι μί, Eur. Alc. 48 Monk. (On the etym of ἄν, and the distinctions between it and κε, cf. Kühner Ausf. Gr. § 453.) [ἄ always, v. Herm. Opusc. 4, p. 373, against Dindorf, Praef. Poet. Scen. Gr. p. vii. sqq.]

'Ἀν, conj., =εἰ with subjunctive, Trag. always use ἦν, and so usu. in Att., except Plato. [Herm. Opusc. 4, p. 273, holds ἄ, but Schäfer znō Franke Callin. p. 186, "ἄ"]

'Ἀν, or better ἄν (v. Buttm. Ausf. Gr. § 117, Anm. 4.) shortd. Ep. form of ἀνά, q. v., before ν and τ, Il. 12, 298; 20, 319.

'Ἀν, apocop. from ἀνά, for ἀνέστη like ἐν for ἐνεστί, he stood up, a. ose, Il. 3, 268: and here note that ἄν always represents past tenses of the Indic., ἀνά Imperat. pres., but v. ἀνά †'Ἀν by crasis for ἄν.

'Ἀν, sometimes for a priv. before a vowel: the ν prob. belongs to the root of the negative, as in other instances a stands immediately before the vowel (ἄ-έκων, ἄ-ελπίτης): perh the negat. in full was ἀνά (cf. ἀνευ, Lat. in, Engl. un).—which is still retained in ἀνάδεδος, ἀνάελλπος, Buttm. Lexil. p. 118, Lob. Phryn. 728. Cf. also νη—

ANA', prep. c. dat. et acc., but c. dat. only in Ep. and Dor. poetry: by apocope ἄν or rather ἄν, before a palatal ἄ, before a labial ἄ, or rather ἄν (v. sub ἄν), but this too only in Ion. and Dor. poetry. Radic. signif. up, upon, opp. to κάτα.

In Od. in phrase ἀνά νηὸς βαίνειν to go on board ship, 2, 416; 9, 177; 15, 284, it is said to govern the gen., but it is better to regard it as the adv., and the gen. to be used of the part affected, v. Jelf. Gr. Gr. § 624, obs.

A. C. DAT., on, upon, without any notion of motion, only in Ep. and Lyr. poetry, and so used by Trag only in Lyrics: ἀνά σκήπτρῳ, upon the sceptre, Il. 1, 15, Pind. P. 1, 10, ἀνά ὤμῳ, upon the shoulder, Od. 11, 127, ἀνά Γαργάρω ἄκρῳ, Il. 15, 152.

2.—σύν, seems to rest on mistake passages, as Eur. I. A. 1058.

B. C. ACC., the common usage, implying motion upwards, directly opposed to κατά—I. of place, up, ἀνά κλίνα, Od. 22, 176, ἀνά ποταμόν, Hdt. 2, 96. Hence—2. from bottom to top, throughout, [ὄλην] ἀνά νῦτα θέουσιν διαμπερὲς ἀνέχ' ἱκάνει, Il. 13, 547, so ἀνά ὄμιον, ὅσιν, ὄμιλον, through all the people, throughout the city, throng; hither may be referred ἀνά στόμα ἔχεν, Hom., to have continually in the mouth, on the tongue; ἀνά θυμὸν φρονέειν, to revolve up and down in one's mind, i. e. frequently, Il. 2, 36. ἀνά τὸν πρῶτον εἶναι, to be among the first, Hdt. 9, 86. And so—II. of time throughout, in Hom. only ἀνά νῦκτα, all night through, Il. 14, 80: Hdt. has it often ἀνά πᾶσαν τὴν ἡμέραν, all the day long (not ἀνά πᾶσαν ἡμ., of which below), ἀνά τὸν πόλεμον, etc.—III. in numbers, up to, ἀνά ἐλκοσι μέτρα χεῖς, he poured full twenty measures, Od. 9, 209: and so—IV. of mode and manner; the action being conceived of as moving along to some higher point, as ἀνά κράτος, from weakness up to the full measure of strength, i. e. strongly, vigorously, much like κατὰ κράτος φεύγειν, ἀπομάχουσθαι, Xen

Cyr. 4, 2, 30; 5, 3, 12; so ἀνὰ μέρος, in turn; hence arises its distributive force, πέμπεσκε δὲ ἀνὰ πᾶν ἔτος, as he was accustomed to send every year. Hdt. 7, 106; ἀνὰ πᾶσαν ἡμέραν day by day, Hdt. 2, 37; at the rate of, ἀνὰ πέντε παρσάγγας τῆς ἡμέρας, Xen. An. 4, 6, 4.

C. WITHOUT CASE, as adv., Hom. and poet., thereon, thereupon, and with the notion of distribution through a space, throughout, all over: ἀνὰ βότρυες ἦσαν, all over there were clusters, Il. 18, 562; but ἀνὰ oft. is an adv. in Hom., where acc. to some it is only parted from its verb by tmesis, ἀνὰ δ' ὄρτο for ἀνὰρτο δέ, ἀνὰ τεύχε' ἔειρας for τεύχεα ἡνείκας, etc.

D. IN COMPOS.—1. as in B. I.—ἀνὰ, up to, upwards, up, opp. to κατά, as ἀναβαίνω, ἀνίστημι, ἀναβόαι, ἀναπνεύω: poet. sometimes doubled, ἀνὰ δροσὸν ἄν' ἀναβαίνειν, Od. 22, 132.—2. hence flows the signif. of increase or strengthening, as in ἀνακρίνω, although it cannot always be translated, as in the Hom. ἀνέρομαι: in this case opp. to ὑπό. sub.—3. from the notion, throughout, C., comes that of repetition and improvement, as in ἀναβλαστάνω, ἀναγινώσκω.—4. the notion of back, backwards, in ἀναχωρέω, ἀνανεύω, etc., seems to come from such phrases as ἀνὰ ῥέον, up, i. e. against, the stream,—Lat. re-, retro-. When used as prep. ἀνὰ never suffers anastrophe, though Heim. ad Elmsl. Med. 1143 maintains the contrary, cf. sq. [ἀνὰ]

Ἀνα, the prep. ἀνὰ written with anastroph., usu. expl. for ἀνστήθι, up! arise! usu. ἄλλ' ἀνα, Il. 6, 331, Od. 18, 13, but it is better, and more in accordance with Homeric usage to regard it as simple ἀν, up!—in this signif. the ult. is never elided, Herm. Soph. Aj. 194: the apocop. ἀν is always for ἀνέστη. [ἀνὰ]

Ἀνα, vocat. of ἄναξ, king, only in the phrases ὦ ἄνα, contr. ἄνα, and Ζεῦ ἄνα, and only as an address to gods, Hom.: Sappho is said to have used it also for ὦ ἄνασσα.—Rare in Trag. Herm. Bacch. 546: the ult. is never elided, Herm. H. Ap. 526. [ἀνὰ]

Ἀνάβα, Att. for ἀναβῆθι, imperat. aor. 2 from ἀναβαίνω.

Ἀναβάδην, adv., (ἀναβαίνω) going up, mounting: also sitting or being up on high, aloft, hence in Ar. Ach. 399, Plut. 1123, opp. to καταβάδην, either upstairs, in the garret, or with the legs up, lying on a couch, cf. Interr. ad Il. cc., and Alb. Hesych. 1, p. 313. [βῆ]

Il. 2, 198. Od. 17,

Vig. § 66: oft. with βροτὸς or θνητὸς added; also ἀνδρὲς ἡμίθεοι, Il. 12, 23, and freq. ἀνδρὲς ἥρωες.—III. a man, as opp. to a youth, though the latter is also called in Hom. νέος, νεώτερος, κοινότερος, ὁπλότερος, νεηνίης ἀνὴρ: so again ἀνὴρ γέρον or προγενέστερος, Od. 4, 205: 18, 53; but ἀνὴρ alone always means a man in the prime of life, esp. a warrior.—IV. a man, emphatically so, a man indeed; ἀνέρες ἔστε, φίλοι, Il. 5, 529, and freq. in Hdt. esp. πολλοὶ μὲν ἀνθρωποὶ, ὀλίγοι δὲ ἀνδρες, Hdt. 7, 210; so too in Att., who also use it of moral worth, a man, a brave, honest man, Valck. Hdt. l. c. Weiss. Hdt. 9, 39, Heind. Plat. Phaedr. 239 B.—V. a husband, Hom., Hdt., and Att.: ἐς ἀνδρὸς ἵναί, ὃς ἐλθεῖν, to be married, Schäf. Almost all these signf. belong to Lat. vir.—VI. later usages, esp. in Att.—1. ἀνὴρ was commonly joined with titles, professions, and the like, as in Hom., as ἀνὴρ δικαστής, ὄρχων, φιλόσοφος, etc.: also with names of nations as ἀνδρες Κίλικες, Θρηῆες, etc.: esp. in addresses, ἀνδρες δικασταί, βουλευταί, ἔφοροι, and so in the well-known ἀνδρες Ἀθηναῖοι: hence in Com. ἀνδρες κύνες, ἰχθύες, Meineke Archipp. Ichth. 14.—2. ὁ ἀνὴρ, by crasis, Att. ἀνὴρ, Ion. ἀνὴρ, is very freq. used as emphatically for αὐτός, ἐκεῖνος, Trag., and Plat.: and so in oblique cases without the article, Trag., but not in prose: very rare in this signf. without the article, v. Stallb. Excurs. ad Plat. Phaedr., cf. ἀνὴρω ποσ.—3. ἀνὴρ ὅδε, ὅδ' ἀνὴρ, freq. in Trag. in all cases=ἐγώ, ἐμάντω, etc.—4. πᾶς ἀνὴρ, every man, every one freq. in Plat. (Of one root with ἄνῃρ are ἀρήν, Ἀρης, ἀρείω, ἀριστος ἀρετή: on the same root in kindred languages, v. Lassen in the Rhein. isches Museum, 2, p. 160.) [In Ep. usu. ἄ in arsis, ᾱ in thesis; but in trisyll. cases (ἀνέρος, etc., always ᾱ Att. always ᾱ; for when it is long, i must be written ἀνὴρ (by crasis) ὁ δ' ἀνὴρ), Pors. Phoen. 1670; but in Lyr. parts of Tragedy it sometimes follows the Ep. rule, as Soph. O. T. 869, cf. Lob. Aj. 1183.]

Ἀρ*, Ep. before a consonant for ἄρα, Hom.

ἈΡΑ*, Ep. ρά, which is enclitic, and before a consonant ἄρ, akin to ἄρα, and soimplying close connexion, with a force more or less illative. The Epic usages are not easily classified, the Att. much more precise.—A. EPIC USAGE. It denotes—I. simply immediate transition from one thing to another, then, straightway, ἴς φάτο, βῆ δ' ἄρ' οὐνερος, Il. 2, 16: usu. here with other particles, δέ, ἦ, ὥς, etc. and so after advs. of time, τότε δὲ ἄρ' αὖτις ἄρα: in apodosis, as ἔπειθ' οὐκ ἐπὶ ἡγήσατο... αὐτίκ' ἄρ' ἔλθεν, Od. 5, 77: oft. repeated from the protasis, as Il. 21, 426, etc.—2. in enumerating many particulars, e. g. in Homer's catalogue, then, next in order, as οἱ δ' ἄρ' Ἀθήνας εἶχον, etc.—II. actual connexion between one thing and another, such as—I. that of antecedent and consequent, as where Ἠφαίστος ὠνοχέει... ἄσβεστος δ' ἄρ' ἠνάρτα γέλοιο, Il. 1, 599, cf. 24, 507: οὐ τὸν κ' ἄρ' ἄλλεγ' ἔδωκε, for this then, Il. 1, 96; in which cases it is often also found with οὐκ in prosis. So where a question suggests itself, τίς τ' ἄρ' τῶν δ' ἄρ' ἄριστος ἐστίν; who then, it will be asked, was... Il. 7, 761: likewise in negative answers, s' οὐτ' ἄρ' οὐδ' εὐχολῆς ἐπιμελέσθαι, in which it may best be rendered by It is not for a vow (neglected) that is worth, Il. 1, 93: and thus with emmonstr. pronoun in apodosis, ἄλλ' ἰὼν Πριάμοιο... τὸν β' Ὀδυσσεὺς βάλε, it was, whom, Il. 4, 501. This usage is universal in Greek.—2. explanation of a thing going before, e. g. εἰ μὴ περὶ φάτον ἐπος ἐκβαλε, ... ὅτ' ἄρ' ἄντι θεῶν φάγετον, "had he not let all an impious word: for he said,"

Herm. H. Ven. 53: with relat. pron. ἄρα makes it more precise and definite, ἐκ δ' ἔθορε κλήρος, ὃν ἄρ' ἔλεον αὐτοῖς, just the one, the very one which... Il. 7, 182, v. Herm. H. 390: ἄρα cannot begin a sentence. [7]

B. ATTIC USAGE. Here it always is a regular illative for et, whether in direct conclusions οὖν, then, therefore, so then, κάλλισ' οὖν... ἄρα ἢ ἀρετῇ, Arist. Eth. N., or more commonly—2. by way of oblique inference, μάτην ἄρ', ὥς εἴκεν, ἤκομεν, so, it seems then, Soph. El. 772: οὗτω κοινὸν ἄρα χαρά καὶ λύπη... so true is it that... Xen. Hell. 7, 1, 32; usu. expressing pain or sorrow, Herm. Aj. 1005, always slight surprise, Kühner, Gr. Gr. § 756, 4.—3. in questions, where it differs from ἄρα in referring only to a part of the clause, as Aesch. Theb. 92, τίς ἄρα ῥύσεται; who is there to save? while ἄρα τις ῥύσεται would be will any one save, Herm. praef. Soph. O. C.: connected with this is its use in exclamations, οἶαί ἄρ' ἤβην... ἀπόλεσεν, what a bane was that which he has destroyed, Aesch. Pers. 733: so ὡς οὕτως, πᾶν ἄρα, or without other particle, ἐξ ἡ ἄρα, Soph. Fr. 603.—4. for τοι ἄρα, contr. τᾶρα, v. τοι.—5. εἰ μὴ ἄρ' seems to be unless perhaps, v. Buttin ad Dem. Mid. n. 35, in which case ἄρα is often separated from εἰ μὴ. Stallb. Plat. Prot. 355 B.

Ἀρά*; interrog. particle, = Lat. num; in accent and signf. a stronger form of ἄρα—1. it makes the question more doubtful, so that usu. a negat. answer is expected, which is sometimes more clearly shown by the use of ἄρα μὴ, = *μὴ*ν, followed by indie, is it so? surely not so? v. Herm. Vig. n. 295.—2. if an affirmative answer is confidently expected, ἄρα οὐ is used, = Lat. nonne? but ἄρα by itself, if the expectation be less confident, = Lat. ne enclitic, v. Herm. Vig. n. 294, Kühner Gr. Gr. § 834, 2, sq.—3. ἄρα οὐν; like οὐκ οὐν, was orig. always a negative question implying an affirmative, but afterwards was used both affirmatively and negatively, v. Herm. Soph. Ant. 268.—4. in ἄρα γε each particle retains its force, γε serving to make the question more definite.—5. ἄρα is used in exclamations, ὀδυνηρὸς ἄρ' ὁ πλοῦτος! Eur. Phoen. 575, where ἄρ' οὐ with the interrog. would be used, were it a question: ἄρα is never used convertibly with ἄρα metr. grat., v. Herm. praef. Soph. O. C. In prose ἄρα always stands first in the sentence: in poetry emphatic words sometimes precede it, v. Herm. l. c.

ἈΡΑ*, ᾤς, ῆ, Ion. ἈΡΗ, ῆς, α, prayer, in Hom. usu. as a curse, more rarely as a blessing, as in Hdt. 6, 63, ἄρην ἐποιήσαντο παῖδα γενέσθαι: in Att. poets mostly in plur.—II. hence the effect of the curse, mischief, ruin, Hom., cf. Heyne on Il. 12, 334.—III. Aesch. personified Ἀρά as the goddess of destruction and revenge, Lat. Dira, whose office is the same as that of the Erinyes in Soph. El. 111, ὃ πόντῃ 'Ἀρά, σέμναι τε θεῶν παῖδες ἔρυνεν, while in Aesch. Eum. 417, the Erinyes say that this is their own name γῆς ὑπαί, cf. Müll. Eumen. § 77. (The verb is ἄραμαι: Passow would connect these words with ἄρης, but the roots seem different.) [ἄρ Ep. in arsis, ἄρ in thesis, Att. always ἄρ.]

Ἀράδος*, ον, (a priv., ῥάβδος) without staff or rod.

Ἀράβειω*, ῶ, ι, ῆ-σω, (ἄραβος) to rattle, ring, Hom., mostly in Il., and always of arm ur, as ἤριπεν ἐξ ὀχέων, ἀράβηος δὲ τεύχε' ἐπ' αὐτῷ.—II. in Ar. Rh., c. acc. ἄρ. ὀδόντας, to gnash or grind the teeth.

Ἀραβία*, ας, ῆ, Arabia, wife of Ae-gyptus, Apollod. 2, 1, 5.—2. a country in south west of Asia, Hdt., Aesch. etc. [ἄρᾱ, but Dion. P. also ἄρ.] Hence
